PART II
POINTS IN ISSUE

3       3.       This Intervener intervenes in response to the constitutional questions stated in this 4 matter:

- 5                   1.       Does the definition of “benefits” in s. 1 of the Medicare 6                   Protection Act, S.B.C. 1992, c. 76 infringe s. 15(1) of the 7                   Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by failing to 8                   include medical interpreter services for the deaf?
- 9                   2.       If the answer to question 1 is yes, is the infringement
10                  demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society 11                  pursuant to s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and 12                  Freedoms?
- 13                  3.       Do ss. 3, 5, and 9 of the Hospital Insurance Act, 14                  R.S.B.C., c. 180, and the Regulations enacted pursuant 15                  to s. 9 of that Act, infringe s. 15(1) of the Canadian 16                  Charter of Rights and Freedoms by failing to require that 17                  hospitals in the Province of British Columbia provide 18                  medical interpreter services for the deaf?
- 19                  4.       If the answer to question 3 is yes, is the infringement
20                  demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society
21                  pursuant to s. 1 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and 22                  Freedoms?

23       4.       It is the position of this Intervener that neither the failure to include medical 24       interpreter services for the deaf as a benefit under the Medicare Protection Act nor the 25       absence of a requirement under the Hospital Insurance Act obliging hospitals to provide 26       medical interpreter services for the deaf infringes s. 15(1) of the Charter. Alternatively, any 27       limitation of rights under Charter s. 15(1) is justifiable as a reasonable limitation of the rights 28       under Charter s. 1.

PART III
ARGUMENT

A     INTRODUCTION

5.     The claim of the Appellants in this case relates to difficulties that they have experienced, as deaf people, in communicating with doctors and other health care professionals. They argue that the failure to provide deaf interpreter services to facilitate these communications infringes their rights under s. 15(1) of the Charter. They choose, however, to focus their attack on the legislation establishing the funding system for those services, as opposed to the provision of the services themselves.

6.     Difficulty in communication is something we all may face at one time or another, to a greater or lesser extent. Effectiveness of communication can be affected by many factors, including the relative ages, education and sophistication of the persons involved. Moreover, particularly in a multicultural nation such as Canada, language and cultural barriers can also pose barriers to effective communication. For the Appellants, however, the difficulty is caused by a physical disability that results in impaired communication, not just in interactions with health care providers, but in potentially every interaction with persons who do not understand American Sign Language (“ASL”). The Appellants’ claim therefore has potentially enormous implications, not just in this area, but in respect of every benefit program implemented by government and every statutory right to receive public services.

B     THE CONTEXT: S. 15(1) AND BENEFIT PROGRAMS

7.     This Court has often stressed the need to consider the larger social, political and legal context in assessing equality and other Charter claims.

1 See, e.g.:

2 R. v. Turpin, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1296 at 1331-32 per Wilson J.

3 Symes v. Canada, [1993] 4 S.C.R. 695 at 756 per Iacobucci J.

4
5 Thibaudeau v. Canada, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 627 at 675 per Gonthier 6 J.

7 8. In this case, it is submitted, this broader context is particularly important, given that 8 what is at issue is the scope, the structure and the content of statutory benefits. By 9 structuring their claim in this manner, the Appellants invite this Court to inquire into 10 economic and social policy in the exceedingly difficult, and politically controversial, area 11 of public health care funding. In this context, the comments of La Forest J. in Andrews v.
12 Law Society of British Columbia, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 143 at 194 are particularly apt:

13 ... it was never intended in enacting s. 15 that it become a tool 14 for the wholesale subjection to judicial scrutiny of variegated 15 legislated choices in no way infringing on values fundamental 16 to a free and democratic society. Like my colleague, I am not 17 prepared to accept that all legislative classification must be 18 rationally supportable before the courts. Much economic and 19 social policy-making is simply beyond the institutional 20 competence of the courts: their role is to protect against 21 incursions on fundamental values, not to second guess policy 22 decisions.

23 . . . . .

24 Assuming there is room under s. 15 for judicial intervention 25 beyond the traditionally established and analogous policies 26 against discrimination discussed by my colleague, it bears 27 repeating that considerations of institutional functions and 28 resources should make courts extremely wary about questioning 29 legislative and governmental choices in such areas. (emphasis 30 added)

1 9. As the Respondents have stressed, one of the central preoccupations of the British 2 Columbia government is maintaining the viability of the health care system as a whole, a 3 system that is already under severe stress.

4 Factum of the Respondents, para. 27

5 Report of the British Columbia Royal Commission on Health
6 Care and Costs, Exhibit 12, Case on Appeal, Vol. IV, p. 640

7 10. In that regard, it is submitted, the following remarks of Wilson J. in the Andrews case 8 are relevant:

9 If every distinction between individuals and groups gave rise to 10 a violation of s. 15, then this standard might well be too 11 stringent for application in all cases and might deny the 12 community at large the benefits associated with sound and 13 desirable social and economic legislation. (Andrews v. Law 14 Society of British Columbia, supra at 154)

15 11. Similarly, Sopinka J. commented on the potential ramifications for government 16 spending if the guarantee of freedom of expression in Charter s. 2(b) operated to require the 17 government, having chosen to fund or consult one group, to fund other points of view:

18 . . . I should add that it cannot be said that every time the 19 Government of Canada chooses to fund or consult a certain 20 group, thereby providing a platform upon which to convey 21 certain views, that the Government is also required to fund a 22 group purporting to represent the opposite point of view.
23 Otherwise, the implications of this proposition would be 24 untenable. . . . If this was the intended scope of s. 2(b) of the 25 Charter, the ramifications on government spending would be far 26 reaching indeed. (Native Women's Ass'n of Canada v. Canada, 27 [1994] 3 S.C.R. 627 at 656)

1 12. Recently, in Thibaudeau v. Canada, supra, members of this Court acknowledged the 2 complexity of assessing a Charter s. 15(1) claim in the special context of income tax 3 legislation, the very essence of which involves making numerous distinctions between classes 4 of taxpayers while attempting to reconcile a range of necessarily divergent interests.

5 Thibaudeau v. Canada, supra at 702 per Cory and Iacobucci JJ.
 6 and at 675-76, per Gonthier J.:

7 ...the ITA is subject to the application of the Charter just as any 8 other legislation is: the special nature of the former clearly 9 cannot be taken as a basis for maintaining that it is not subject 10 to the latter. This was recently pointed out by my colleague 11 Iacobucci J. in Symes, supra, at p. 753. I would add, however, 12 that though it may not be relevant to determining whether the 13 Charter applies to the ITA, the special nature of the latter is 14 nonetheless a significant factor that must be taken into account 15 in defining the scope of the right relied on, which here as we 16 know is the right to “equal benefit of the law”

17 And see:

18 Zurich Insurance Co. v. Ontario (Human Rights Commission), 19 [1992] 2 S.C.R. 321 at 338 per Sopinka J., holding that the 20 determination of insurance rates and benefits does not fit easily 21 within traditional human rights concepts.

22 13. Similarly, it is submitted, the fact that the issues raised by the Appellants in this case 23 potentially have an enormous impact on legislative policy options and government spending 24 decisions must be taken into account in considering the application of s. 15(1).

25 C APPLICATION OF THE CHARTER - THE DISTINCTION BETWEEN 26 STATUTORY BENEFIT SCHEMES AND THE PROVISION OF SERVICES

27 14. Clearly, the provisions of both the Medicare Protection Act and the Hospital 28 Insurance Act are amenable to Charter scrutiny. For the reasons that follow, however, it is

1 submitted that neither the definition of “benefits” under the former nor the failure to compel 2 hospitals to provide medical interpreter services under the latter discriminates against the 3 Appellants, contrary to Charter s. 15(1). On their face, these statutes simply provide for 4 specified medical and hospital benefits that are available to all who meet the residency 5 requirements.

6 15. It is further submitted that these statutes cannot be said to adversely impact upon the 7 Appellants. Issues of adverse impact, it is submitted, arise from the manner in which a 8 medical or hospital service is provided, and not from the legislation itself. It is necessary to 9 distinguish between those effects wholly caused by or contributed to by an impugned 10 provision, and those social circumstances that exist independently.

11 Symes v. Canada, supra at 764-765, per Iacobucci J.

12 Fernandes v. Director of Social Services (Winnipeg Central) 13 (1992), 93 D.L.R. (4th) 402 (Man. C.A.) at 414, leave to appeal
14 to S.C.C. refused 99 D.L.R. (4th) viii

15
16 16. Until a patient goes to see a doctor, or is in the process of receiving an insured 17 medical or hospital service, there is no way to determine whether, or in what manner, the 18 patient might be adversely affected in terms of his or her ability to access the funded service.
19 To cite one illustration from this case, at one point Mrs. Warren went to a doctor who was 20 fluent in ASL. She did not suffer an adverse impact despite the failure of the legislation to 21 include medical interpreters as an insured benefit.

22 17. Given that the purpose of s. 15(1) is to protect human dignity by ensuring that all 23 individuals are recognized at law as being equally deserving of concern, respect and 24 consideration, it is the effect of the impugned distinction upon the claimant that is the prime 25 concern under s. 15(1).

1            Egan v. Canada, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 513 at 584 and 603, per Cory
2            and Iacobucci JJ.

3            Accordingly, it is submitted, it is necessary to focus the s. 15(1) debate, not on the intricacies 4            of legislative or government funding for doctors, hospitals and other health care providers, 5            but rather on the point at which the claimant comes into contact with the health care system, 6            namely the point of service delivery. Where the service is provided by a governmental actor 7            within the meaning of Charter s. 32(1), the equality guarantee in s. 15(1) will apply, with 8            the issue becoming one of identifying the governmental obligation to accommodate the needs 9            of the disabled.

10           18.    In Eaton v. Brant County Board of Education, Sopinka J. made the following 11           comments with respect to the scope of the s. 15(1) protections to persons with disabilities, 12           and the role of society in accommodating differences:

13           . . . it is the failure to make reasonable accommodation, to fine-14           tune society so that its structures and assumptions do not result 15           in the relegation and banishment of disabled persons from 16           participation, which results in discrimination against them. The 17           discrimination inquiry which uses “the attribution of 18           stereotypical characteristics” reasoning as commonly understood 19           is simply inappropriate here. It may be seen rather as a case of 20           reverse stereotyping which, by not allowing for the condition of 21           a disabled individual, ignores his or her disability and forces the 22           individual to sink or swim within the mainstream movement. It 23           is recognition of the actual characteristics, and reasonable 24           accommodation of these characteristics which is the central 25           purpose of s. 15(1) in relation to disability. (February 6, 1997, 26           as yet unreported, at para. 67 per Sopinka J.)

1 19. The import of the Eaton decision, it is submitted, is that governmental entities within 2 the meaning of Charter s. 32 face an obligation of reasonable accommodation under s. 15(1)
3 in respect of differences related to disabilities. The concept of reasonable accommodation 4 is, of course, well known and has evolved in the context of human rights legislation and 5 jurisprudence. It is not yet clear what the scope of the obligation is under s. 15(1), and how 6 this duty relates to the usual framework for s. 15 analysis, or the extent to which the related 7 human rights concepts of undue hardship and the responsibility of claimants in facilitating 8 accommodation will also find a place under s. 15.

9 20. In Manitoba, the provincial government provides deaf interpreter services, in respect 10 of medical services provided by the government itself. However, in Manitoba as in British 11 Columbia, deaf interpreter services are not included as an insured benefit as a component of 12 health insurance legislation. In the case of individual services provided by private caregivers, 13 it is submitted, those caregivers are subject to an obligation to reasonably accommodate the 14 disabled, within the framework of human rights legislation. It is the persons involved in 15 providing the service who are in the best position to provide, in a flexible manner, whatever 16 "fine-tuning" is required to make their services reasonably accessible, including the provision 17 of deaf interpreters where necessary to provide adequate medical care to individual patients.

18 The Human Rights Code, C.C.S.M., c. H175, and see especially 19 s. 9(1)(d), which incorporates failure to make reasonable 20 accommodation in the Code's definition of discrimination

21 21. In that regard, it is submitted, physicians and other non-governmental health care 22 providers face no greater obligations than any other service or business. The cost of 23 providing reasonable accommodation may be viewed as an overhead expense, a part of the 24 cost of doing business.

1 22. That there is government funding in respect of some of the services performed by 2 health care providers does not negate their obligation of reasonable accommodation. By way 3 of analogy, social welfare programs provide assistance to persons who lack the basic 4 necessities, for such things as food, dental care and pharmaceuticals. The provision of this 5 assistance, it is submitted, whether to the person in need or directly to the service provider, 6 does not operate to relieve grocery stores, dentists or pharmacists of their obligations under 7 human rights legislation, or to shift their responsibility to reasonably accommodate those 8 recipients of social welfare benefits who happen to be deaf or otherwise disabled.

9 McKinney v. University of Guelph, [1990] 3 S.C.R. 229 at 274-10 275 per La Forest J.

11 Howard v. University of British Columbia (1993), 18 C.H.R.R.
12 D/353 (B.C.H.R.C.)

13 23. This approach, it is submitted, is consistent with the approach taken in the cases 14 referred to by the Appellants at paras. 79 and 80 of their factum. In Howard v. University
15 of British Columbia, supra, for example, the British Columbia Human Rights Council found 16 that the University of British Columbia discriminated against Mr. Howard in providing him 17 with education services customarily available to the public, because it did not provide 18 interpreter services. The tribunal rejected the University's argument that it should be 19 absolved of responsibility because the issue was really one of government funding.

20 24. The evidence in this case failed to establish that the Appellants were denied medical 21 services available to the hearing, because of their disability. They were found to have 22 received adequate and appropriate medical treatment.

23 Reasons of Hollinrake, J.A., Case on Appeal, Vol III, p. 514, ll.
24 16-22

1 25. The issue of reasonable accommodation, therefore, does not appear to be directly 2 relevant to the disposition of the appeal. The following submissions are provided, however, 3 for the purpose of demonstrating that focusing directly on the provision of services provides 4 a logically consistent and integrated approach to the application of equality rights of the 5 disabled in relation to the government, under s. 15(1) of the Charter, and in relation to the 6 private parties who perform the vast majority of medical services, under provincial human 7 rights legislation.

8 26. Given the great variation in the needs of disabled individuals, accommodation is an 9 issue that requires resolution on a case by case basis. As one commentator has observed:

10 ... [T]here is no magic formula for accommodating all disabled 11 students in one fell swoop. Disabilities vary from individual to 12 individual. ... [T]he same disability can have a very different 13 impact on different persons, depending on a myriad of factors, 14 such as attitudes, internal and external resources, social support 15 and general environment and the availability of training and 16 accommodation techniques. (David Lepofsky, "Disabled
17 Persons and Canadian Law Schools: The Right to the Equal 18 Benefit of the Law School" (1991), 36 McGill Law Journal 636 19 at 638)

20 See also:

21 Shelagh Day and Gwen Brodsky, "The Duty to Accommodate: 22 Who Will Benefit" (1996), 75 Can. Bar Rev. (No. 3) 433 at 469:

23 Though it is similarly socially constructed as 24 disadvantaging, compared to female sex or black race, disability 25 is a category that includes not a few but a huge range of 26 characteristics. It covers a wide spectrum of physical, emotional 27 and intellectual capacities. There are many (dis)abilities and no 28 one (dis)ability is monolithic. For example, there are many 29 variations among people in their ability to see, and each person 30 who is labelled blind is unique; one person who is blind may

1 use tapes to receive or convey information, another braille, 2 another a computer.

3 27. It is submitted that the individual nature of what is required to reasonably 4 accommodate the needs of a disabled person also supports the position that the inquiry as to 5 whether there has been discrimination by reason of failure to reasonably accommodate, and 6 the fashioning of an appropriate remedy in the event such a failure has been demonstrated, 7 is more appropriately framed in terms of service provision to specific individuals rather than 8 the alleged inadequacies of a legislative funding scheme. Including a particular service in 9 a fee schedule, which is what the Appellants advocate, is a blunt, cumbersome and imprecise 10 way to promote equality needs of disabled persons.

11 28. It is therefore respectfully submitted that the courts below correctly ruled that the 12 impugned benefit program does not discriminate with respect to the funding of the medical 13 services it includes as insured benefits. Issues relating to adverse impact on, and the 14 reasonable accommodation of, the disabled in accessing such services arise in the context of 15 the provision of the service, whether by government or private parties, and do not affect the 16 validity of the funding program itself. Therefore, given that the funding programs 17 established by the impugned legislation in the case at bar apply equally to deaf and otherwise 18 disabled persons, as to all other qualified residents of the province, it is submitted that the 19 impugned legislation does not violate Charter s. 15(1).

20 D CHARTER S. 1

21 29. This Intervener adopts the submissions of the Respondents at paragraphs 103 to 134 22 of the factum of the Respondents.

1 30. As the Respondents have stressed, in this context, there is no way to validly 2 distinguish between requests to provide deaf interpreter services, and other requests to 3 provide services to facilitate access to medical and hospital services, particularly in respect 4 of claimants with other disabilities. The implications of the remedy sought by the 5 Appellants, therefore, are in some ways similar those where an individual seeks an 6 interlocutory exemption from the application of legislation. In Manitoba (A.G.) v.
7 Metropolitan Stores Ltd., [1987] 1 S.C.R. 110, Beetz J. referred to the cascading effect of 8 such applications:

9           Depending on the nature of the cases, to grant an exemption in 10           the form of a stay to one litigant is often to make it difficult to 11           refuse the same remedy to other litigants who find themselves 12           in essentially the same situation, and to risk provoking a cascade 13           of stays and exemptions, the sum of which make them 14           tantamount to a suspension case. (p. 146)

15 31. Similarly, it is submitted, the logical implications of the argument of the Appellants 16 extend to affect the province's ability to ensure the fiscal sustainability of the health care 17 system as a whole. It is submitted that, as in Weatherall v. Canada (Attorney General), 18 [1993] 2 S.C.R. 872 at 878, it is appropriate to address issues of s. 1 justification by 19 reference to the broader principles that are given material application by the specific issues 20 of the case.

21 E      REMEDY

22 32. This Intervener adopts the submissions of the Respondents with respect to remedy.

PART IV
ORDER SOUGHT

3 33. This Intervener respectfully requests that the first and the third Constitutional 4 Questions in this matter be answered in the negative. If it is necessary to answer the second 5 and fourth questions, it is submitted they should be answered in the affirmative.

6 ALL OF WHICH IS RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED.
