PART I

STATEMENT OF FACTS

1. The facts are stated in paragraphs 1 - 20 of the Appellant's Factum and are amplified by the Respondent in Part I of its factum.

2. The Attorney General of Manitoba applied to intervene in this proceeding prior to the order of this Honourable Court of January 29, 1991 setting the constitutional questions. On Wednesday, January 9, 1991, Lamer, C.J.C. granted an order pursuant to Rule 18 permitting the Attorney General of Manitoba to intervene in this appeal.

3. This intervention is limited to addressing the constitutional issues raised by the Appellant, namely the applicability of sections 7 and 11 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter") to the Appellant's case and to the justifiability of any alleged constitutional infringement under section 1 of the Charter.

PART II

POINTS IN ISSUE AND THE POSITION OF THIS INTERVENER WITH RESPECT THERETO

4. This intervener wishes to respond to the following points in issue, all of which relate to the extent to which the relevant legislation and the proceedings in question conform to the guarantees entrenched in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms:

1. Does section 52(4) of The Law Society Act of Manitoba, R.S.M. 1987, c. L100, contravene section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms ("Charter")?

ANSWER: NO. SECTION 7 IS NOT ENGAGED BECAUSE THE IMPUGNED LEGISLATION AND THE PROCEEDINGS RELATED THERETO DO NOT EFFECT A DEPRIVATION OF A "LIBERTY" OR "SECURITY OF THE PERSON" INTEREST. IN ANY EVENT, THERE IS NO BREACH OF ANY PRINCIPLE OF FUNDAMENTAL JUSTICE.

2. If the answer to question 1 is affirmative, is s. 52(4) of The Law Society Act of Manitoba, R.S.M. 1987 c. 100, justified by section 1 of the Charter?

ANSWER: YES. THE IMPUGNED PROVISION IS JUSTIFIED UNDER SECTION 1.

3. Does section 11 of the Charter apply to the Citation and the disciplinary proceedings brought against the Appellant?

ANSWER: NO. THE RESPONDENT IS NOT SUBJECT TO THE CHARTER BECAUSE IT IS NOT "GOVERNMENT" WITHIN SECTION 32 OF THE CHARTER. MOREOVER, SECTION 11 DOES NOT APPLY TO THE DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS AS THEY ARE NEITHER CRIMINAL IN NATURE NOR DO THEY INVOLVE TRUE PENAL CONSEQUENCES.

PART III

ARGUMENT

I. Does section 52(4) of The Law Society Act of Manitoba contravene s. 7 of the Charter?

A. The Impugned Legislation

5. The legislation which the Appellant seeks to impugn for constitutional reasons is subsection 52(4) of The Law Society Act, the text of which is set out below:

Payment of costs of investigation and inquiry

52(4) A barrister, solicitor, or student, who is found guilty of professional misconduct, or of conduct unbecoming a barrister, solicitor, or student, or is found incompetent may be ordered by the governing body to pay, all or any part of, the costs and expenses incurred by the society in and about the investigation into, proceedings upon, and hearing of any subject matter of inquiry or any complaint or charge in respect of which he has been found guilty or incompetent.

6. This intervener submits that, in order to understand the context of the legislation being challenged, the following further legislative provisions are relevant:

a) Benchers. The Law Society of Manitoba is a body corporate (s. 2). Its governing body is called, "The Benchers of The Law Society of Manitoba" (s. 5). The membership of the benchers does not consist solely of elective benchers who are members of the Law Society. Rather, elective benchers are only one of eight categories of benchers (s. 6). Other categories comprise a university bencher and four appointed lay benchers, neither category of which could comprise members of the Law Society.

b) Powers. Appendix "1" sets out section 36 of The Law Society Act which specifies the powers that the benchers may exercise on behalf of the Law

2 Society, including those relating to the discipline of its membership (see 3 Appendix "1", especially s. 36(s), (t), (aa), (dd) and (ee)). Further, this 4 Intervener refers this Court to the powers which may be imposed where a member 5 is found guilty of professional misconduct or conduct unbecoming (s. 52(1)).
6 These powers range from disbarment to a reprimand and specifically include the 7 power to order a fine to be paid (s. 52(1)(e), set out in Appendix "1").

8 c) Process. The process relating to the discipline of Law Society 9 members involves two discrete stages. The initial stage involves proceedings 10 before the discipline committee. This committee is empowered to investigate a 11 complaint and to determine whether a charge against a member is warranted.
12 (See Appendix "2"; Rule 19) Every charge formulated by the discipline 13 committee is then referred to the judicial committee (Appendix "2"; Rule 14 19.(13)).

15 The Rules of the Law Society ensure that there is no institutional 16 overlap between the discipline and the judicial committees, inter alia, by 17 expressly stating that a benchers may not sit as a member of the judicial 18 committee on any inquiry in which (s)he sat as a member of the discipline or 19 the standards committee when it was dealing with the matter which is the 20 subject of the inquiry (Appendix "2"; Rule 13(e)).

21 (d) Costs. The power to impose costs pursuant to subsection 52(4) is 22 vested in the benchers, which in turn have delegated this power to the 23 judicial committee via the general authority to delegate granted to the 24 benchers in s. 36(ee) of the Act and specifically assigned to the judicial 25 committee in Rules 21.(1) and 22.(6). The Annual Reports published by the Law 26 Society indicate that the costs recovered under this power have ranged from a 27 low of $2,047 in 1990, to a high of $6,587 in 1989; from 1987 until 1990, the 28 costs accounted for approximately .04% of the Respondent's revenue**.

29 **The actual figures are set out in financial statements published in 30 the Respondent's annual reports, the most recent of which are filed in this Intervener's Book of Authorities. These published reports indicate that the amounts recovered from 1987 until 1990 and the % of the total annual revenue which these amounts represent are: 1987:
$4,775 (.042%); 1988: $4,300 (.037%); 1989: $6,587 (.053%) and 1990: $2,047 (.017%).

2 B. Section 7: Two Elements

3 7. In order to prove that the impugned legislation contravenes section 7 of 4 the Charter, the Appellant must establish not only that a "liberty or security 5 of the person" interest is engaged but also that he has been deprived of this 6 interest in a manner which is contrary to the principles of fundamental 7 justice. As La Forest, J. stated in R. v. Beare, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 387, at 401:

8 The analysis of s. 7 of the Charter involves two 9 steps. To trigger its operation there must first 10 be a finding that there has been a deprivation of 11 the right to "life, liberty and security of the 12 person" and, secondly, that that deprivation is 13 contrary to the principles of fundamental justice.

14 C. No "Liberty or Security of the Person" Interest is Engaged

15 8. This Intervener submits that the Appellant cannot establish that a 16 "liberty or security of the person" interest is engaged under section 7 of the 17 Charter such that the first step within that constitutional section has been 18 met. The right to pursue an occupation or a profession is simply not a 19 "liberty or security of the person" interest under section 7.

20 9. Earlier decisions of this Honourable Court assist in resolving the issue 21 as to whether the right to pursue an occupation or a profession falls within 22 the scope of section 7. In Reference re Criminal Code (Man.), [1990] 1 S.C.R.
23 1123, the Contradictors had argued that the right to work in a lawful 24 occupation, i.e. prostitution, was constitutionally protected under section 7 25 of the Charter because it was a "liberty" interest. While the majority of the 26 Court (Dickson, C.J.C.; La Forest and Sopinka, JJ., concurring) held that it 27 was unnecessary to address this argument because the offence in question 28 carried the possibility of imprisonment and thereby engaged a "liberty" 29 interest, Lamer, J. (as he then was) carefully reviewed and rejected the 30 Contradictors' submission in his concurring majority reasons.

10. Chief Justice Lamer began his analysis by quoting from a passage of the reasons for judgment of Madam Justice Wilson in Jones v. The Queen, [1986]

1 2 2 S.C.R. 284 at 318, where Her Ladyship articulated the underlying basis for 3 an expansive interpretation of the constitutional protection afforded to 4 "liberty" under section 7:

5 I believe that the framers of the Constitution in 6 guaranteeing "liberty" as a fundamental value in a 7 free and democratic society had in mind the freedom 8 of the individual to develop and realize his 9 potential to the full, to plan his own life to suit 10 his own character, to make his choices for good or 11 ill, to be non-conformist, idiosyncratic and even 12 eccentric - to be, in today's parlance, "his own 13 person" and accountable as such. John Stuart Mill 14 described it as "pursuing our own good in our own 15 way."

16 11. Lamer C.J.C. then considered in his reasons for judgment (pp.
17 1168-1170 S.C.R.) the decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in 18 Wilson v. Med. Service Cmsn. of B.C., ([1987] 3 W.W.R. 48; appeal allowed 19 [1989] 2 W.W.R. 1 (B.C.C.A.); leave to appeal refused (S.C.C., Nov. 3/88).
20 His Lordship noted that the British Columbia Court of Appeal drew a 21 distinction in that case, "...between the right to work which it states is a 22 purely economic question, and the right to pursue a livelihood or profession 23 which it characterizes as a matter concerning one's dignity and sense of 24 self-worth" (p.1169). Lamer, C.J.C. was critical of this distinction, 25 stating:

26 There is no doubt that the non-economic or 27 non-pecuniary aspects of work cannot be denied and 28 are indeed important to a person's sense of 29 identity, self-worth and emotional well-being. But 30 it seems to me that the distinction sought to be drawn by the court between a right to work and a right to pursue a profession is, with respect, not one that aids in an understanding of the scope of "liberty" under s. 7 of the Charter.

Further, it is my view that work is not the only activity which contributes to a person's self-worth or emotional well-being. If liberty or security of the person under s. 7 of the Charter were defined in terms of attributes such as dignity, self-worth and emotional well-being, it seems that liberty under s. 7 would be all inclusive. In such a state of affairs there would be serious reason to 1 question the independent existence in the Charter 2 of other rights and freedoms such as freedom of 3 religion and conscience or freedom of expression.

4 (1170 S.C.R.)

5 12. His Lordship then analyzed section 7 in the context of its place 6 within the Charter, linked as it is with a set of provisions (ss. 8-14 of the 7 Charter) which mainly concern themselves with criminal and penal proceedings, 8 and which are listed under the title of "Legal Rights". It is also relevant 9 that within section 7 itself there is a contextual relationship that sheds 10 light on the intended meaning of "liberty" - the state can effect such a 11 deprivation provided it is done in accordance with the principles of 12 fundamental justice. Those very principles are thus themselves a key to 13 determining the nature of the interests protected. His Lordship concluded 14 that:

15 Section 7, and more specifically ss. 8-14, protect 16 individuals against the state when it invokes the 17 judiciary to restrict a person's physical liberty 18 through the use of punishment or detention, when it 19 restricts security of the person, or when it 20 restricts other liberties by employing the method 21 of sanction and punishment traditionally within the 22 judicial realm. (1173-1174 S.C.R., emphasis added)

23 13. While His Lordship did state that section 7 can extend beyond purely 24 criminal or penal matters to certain aspects of administrative decision 25 making, it is submitted that he interpreted this extension to the 26 administrative realm in a limited manner:

27 What is clear, however, is that the state in 28 certain circumstances has created bodies, such as 29 parole boards and mental health review tribunals, 30 that assume control over decisions affecting an individual's liberty and security of the person.
Those are areas, because they involve the restriction to an individual's physical liberty and security of the person, where the judiciary has always had a role to play as guardian of the administration of the justice system. There are also situations in which the state restricts other privileges or, broadly termed, "liberties" in the 1                   guise of regulation, but uses punitive measures in 2                   cases of non-compliance. In such situations, the 3                   state is in effect punishing individuals, in the 4                   classic sense of the word, for non-compliance with 5                   a law or regulation. In all these cases, in my 6                   view, the liberty and security of the person interests protected by s. 7 would be restricted, and one would then have to determine if the restriction was in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

7                   (1176-1177 S.C.R.; italics added)

8                   14.       In another context relating to the interpretation of section 11 of 9                   the Charter, Madam Justice Wilson discussed the nature of proceedings with "a 10                  true penal consequence" as opposed to proceedings aimed at "regulating 11                  activities". It is submitted that it is this type of distinction that Lamer 12                  C.J.C. was referring to in the foregoing passage:

13                   In my view, if a particular matter is of a 14                   public nature, intended to promote public order and 15                   welfare within a public sphere of activity, then 16                   that matter is a kind of matter which falls within 17                   s. 11. If falls within the section because of the 18                   kind of matter it is. This is to be distinguished 19                   from private, domestic or disciplinary matters 20                   which are regulatory, protective or corrective and 21                   which are primarily intended to maintain 22                   discipline, professional integrity and professional 23                   standards or to regulate conduct within a limited 24                   private sphere of activity: see, for example, Re 25                   Law Society of Manitoba and Savino, supra, [(1983), 26                   1 D.L.R. 285 ] at p. 292 . . . . There is also a 27                   fundamental distinction between proceedings 28                   undertaken to promote public order and welfare 29                   within a public sphere of activity and proceedings 30                   undertaken to determine fitness to obtain or maintain a licence. Where disqualifications are imposed as part of a scheme for regulating an activity in order to protect the public, disqualification proceedings are not the sort of "offence" proceedings to which s. 11 is applicable. Proceedings of an administrative nature instituted for the protection of the public in accordance with the policy of a statute are also not the sort of "offence" proceedings to which s.
                  11 is applicable....

Some of these matters may well fall within s. 11, not because they are the classic kind of matters intended to fall within the section, but because they involve the imposition of true penal consequences. In my opinion, a true penal consequence which would attract the application of s. 11 is imprisonment or a fine which by its magnitude would appear to be imposed for the purpose of redressing the wrong done to society at large rather than to the maintenance of internal discipline within the limited sphere of activity.

R. v. Wigglesworth, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 541 at 560-561, per Wilson, J.

15. In Wigglesworth, this Honourable Court found that the "true penal consequences" test was met because the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. R-9, under which the police officer had been disciplined, provided for a penalty of imprisonment. Clearly, there are no similar penal consequences at risk in the disciplinary proceedings which are involved in the case at bar (see paragraph 6(b), supra).

16. It is submitted that the thrust of Lamer, C.J.C.'s reasoning on the scope of section 7 is consistent with the majority of Canadian courts which have rejected the notion that the right to pursue a profession or livelihood is afforded constitutional protection under section 7.

See, eg., Reference re Criminal Code, [1987] 6 W.W.R. 289 (Man. C.A.); [1990] 1 S.C.R. 1123, particularly the opinion of Philp, J.A. at 311-312 where he states,

...I think there has been overwhelming acceptance by the courts in Canada that economic rights are not protected; that "liberty" under s. 7 of the Charter, whether interpreted broadly or restrictively, is concerned with the physical liberty of the person. That is the conclusion I have reached. I have concluded that the right (if there is such a right) to engage in prostitution is not one that is protected by s. 7 of the Charter.

See also Archambault v. Comité de Discipline du Barreau du Québec, [1989] R.J.Q. 688 (C.S.) where Brassard, J. rejected a claim that professional disciplinary proceedings were protected by section 7 of the Charter, stating at p. 696,

1 Le soussigné juge que le droit d'exercer une 2 profession est un droit de propriété qui n'est pas 3 inclus dans l'article 7 de la Charte canadienne et 4 ce droit, de toute façon, doit nécessairement être 5 limité par des règles de discipline, de dignité et 6 d'honneur de la profession.

7 See also Lister v. Ontario (A.G.) (1990), 72 O.R.
8 (2d) 354 (H.C.); (no right to practise dentistry 9 under s. 7)

10 Weyer v. Canada (1988), 83 N.R. 272 (F.C.A.), at 11 276 (research scientist's dismissal raises no s. 7 12 issue)

13 Anthony v. Misericordia General Hospital (1988), 50 14 Man. R. (2d) 49 (Q.B.) at 57 (loss of doctor's 15 temporary admitting privileges at hospital not 16 engaging s. 7)

17 For a contrary view, see O'Sullivan J.A., 18 dissenting, in his reasons for judgment in the 19 Court below, Case on Appeal, p. 107, at p. 113-114

20 17. This Court has commented generally about the potential for 21 essentially "economic" rights finding protection in section 7. In Irwin Toy 22 Ltd. v. Quebec (A.G.), [1989] 1 S.C.R. 927, a decision which predated 23 Reference re Criminal Code (Man.), this Court implied that the scope for such 24 protection may be narrowly circumscribed:

25 What is immediately striking about this section is 26 the inclusion of "security of the person" as 27 opposed to "property". This stands in contrast to 28 the classic liberal formulation, adopted, for 29 example, in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments in 30 the American Bill of Rights, which provide that no person shall be deprived "of life, liberty or property, without due process of law". The intentional exclusion of property from s. 7, and the substitution therefor of "security of the person" has, in our estimation, a dual effect.
First, it leads to a general inference that economic rights as generally encompassed by the term "property" are not within the perimeters of the s. 7 guarantee. This is not to declare, however, that no right with an economic component can fall within "security of the person". ... We do not, at this moment, choose to pronounce upon whether those economic rights fundamental to human

1 life or survival are to be treated as though they 2 are of the same ilk as corporate-commercial 3 economic rights. (p. 1003; emphasis added)

4 18. It is submitted that however important the practice of law may be to 5 the Appellant and others, it can hardly be maintained that it is a matter 6 "...fundamental to human life or survival".

7 19. Further, it is submitted that the Courts should proceed very 8 cautiously before accepting that a right which has a significant economic 9 component, like the right to practise law, is protected by section 7 of the 10 Charter. In Wilson v. Med. Services Cmsn. of B.C., supra, the British 11 Columbia Court of Appeal construed very narrowly the doctrine that section 7 12 does not apply to economic rights by interpreting previous authorities to mean 13 only that the guarantee does not protect pure economic rights. As Mr. David 14 Lepofsky has pointed out, this effectively emasculates the "no economic 15 rights" doctrine:

16 According to such reasoning, section 7 could in 17 effect provide massive protection to economic, 18 commercial and property rights, so long as a 19 Charter claimant carefully appends his economic 20 claim to something additional which a court may 21 find compelling. This can easily be done, because 22 there is no principled bright line which divides 23 rights which are purely economic from rights which 24 are both economic and something more.

25 ...If [the "no economic rights"] doctrine were 26 construed narrowly, allowing a party to make a 27 section 7 economic rights claim by simply adding to 28 it some additional claim which a court may find 29 significant, then litigants could potentially 30 challenge a sweeping variety of business, economic and regulatory legislation under s. 7.

20. A similar observation was made by McLachlin J.A., as she then was, in another decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, Whitbread v. Walley, [1988] 5 W.W.R. 324. In that case, the Court dismissed a section 7 challenge to federal legislation limiting the extent of liability to be attached to a faultless ship owner or operator. In dismissing the constitutional attack, the Court stated that section 7 could not be successfully invoked to strike legislation that directly or even indirectly raised economic interests. Thus, submissions to the effect that economic interests would deprive a person of his/her "life, liberty or security of the person" will not succeed, the Court stated, because this would allow property interests to be protected through the back door, viz.:

The second argument, that economic interests which may affect a person's life, liberty or security of person fall under s. 7, raises the same difficulty. Arguably, it requires reading into s. 7, after the declaration that a person has the right to "life, liberty and security of person", the additional phrase that he has the right to "any benefit which may enhance life, liberty or security of person". This argument, however, is undermined by an even more serious problem. It is difficult to conceive of a property or economic interest which does not arguably impact on the life, liberty or security of person. Liberty and security of person are flexible and expansive concepts, and the degree to which they can expand is intimately tied with the amount of money one has at his or her disposal. For example, a person who is barred by legislation from raising a claim for breach of contract or whose corporation is denied a licence, might claim that the resultant financial loss has affected his liberty and security of person because without money he cannot go where he wants to go, pursue the activities he wishes to pursue, or provide adequately for his future. To accept the plaintiff's second argument would be to make s. 7 applicable to virtually all property interests. Given the scheme of the Charter and the absence of any reference to the right to property, I cannot accept that this was the intention of its framers.

Supra, p. 325, per McLachlin J.A. (as she then was) for a unanimous court.

Note: This Court dismissed the appeal from the decision of the B.C.C.A. in reasons for judgment reported at [1991] 2 W.W.R. 195 which do not touch upon this constitutional issue.

21. This Intervener acknowledges the dictum of Dickson, J. (as he then was) in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd. [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295 at 344, that the interpretation of a Charter guarantee should be "generous rather than legalistic." However, the Charter is not to be interpreted so loosely as to incorporate everything within it that members of the judiciary may consider to be "important." The interpretation must be one which is "aimed at fulfilling the purpose of the particular guarantee".

R. v. Big M Drug Mart, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295, at 344, per Dickson, J. (as he then was)

And see: Re Public Service Employee Relations Act, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313 at 394 per McIntyre, J. where His Lordship stated that "... the Charter should not be regarded as an empty vessel to be filled up with whatever meaning we might wish from time to time."

22. It is submitted that the analysis undertaken by Lamer C.J.C. in Reference re Criminal Code (Man.) is carefully reasoned and in accordance with the purposive approach to Charter interpretation. It provides "'objective and manageable standards' for the operation of the section" within the framework of a purposive interpretation. (Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486 at 499) The text of section 7; its deliberate exclusion of "property"; its placement in conjunction with ss. 8-14 and under the heading of "Legal Rights"; and its reference to principles of fundamental justice, all support the conclusion that its scope does not extend to the right to practise law or pursue a profession generally.

D. The Principles of Fundamental Justice

1. Introduction

23. In order to establish a breach of s. 7, the Appellant must satisfy this Court that the impugned statutory provision effects a deprivation of an interest protected by s. 7 in a manner which violates the principles of fundamental justice.

4
24. The thrust of the Appellant's argument appears to be that the possibility that costs may be awarded upon a finding of misconduct leads to an apprehension of bias or an actual pecuniary interest in finding that the Appellant is guilty of the allegation.

7 8
10
25. It is submitted that the essential issue is whether the maxim nemo judex in causa sua debet esse is a principle of fundamental justice and if so whether, in the particular statutory context, this principle and the corresponding rule against bias, is violated by the impugned provision. It is this Intervener's position that the maxim is a principle of fundamental justice, but that the impugned provision does not violate that concept or the policy upon which it is based.

15
2. The Twin Pillars of Natural Justice or Fairness

16
17
19
26. The nemo judex maxim upon which the precept against bias is founded is a part of the notion of natural justice or procedural fairness. The dictum of Fauteux, C.J.C in Duke v. The Queen, [1972] S.C.R. 917 at 923 is an apt description of that concept, and one that has been referred to by members of this Court in the context of section 7 of the Charter:

20
22
23
25
Under s. 2(e) of the Bill of Rights no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to deprive him of "a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice". Without attempting to formulate any final definition of those words, I would take them to mean, generally, that the tribunal which adjudicates upon his rights must act fairly, in good faith, without bias and in a judicial temper, and must give to him the opportunity adequately to state his case.

26
27
28
29 30
Referred to in Singh v. M.E.I., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177 at 212-213, per Wilson J.

1 27. Other courts have expressed similar approaches in describing natural 2 justice:

3 First, I think that the person accused should know 4 the nature of the accusation made; secondly, that 5 he should be given an opportunity to state his 6 case; and, thirdly, of course, that the tribunal 7 should act in good faith. I do not think that 8 there is really anything more.

9 Byrne v. Kinematograph Renters Society, [1958] 2 10 All E.R. 579 at 599 per Harman J., approv'd in 11 University of Ceylon v. Fernando, [1960] 1 W.L.R.
12 223 at 232 (P.C.)

13 And see: Ridge v. Baldwin, [1964] A.C. 40 (H.L.)
14 at 132, per Lord Hodson:

15 ...three features of natural justice stand out - 16 (1) the right to be heard by an unbiased 17 tribunal; (2) the right to have notice of the 18 charges of misconduct; (3) the right to be heard 19 in answer to those charges.

20 28. In fact, it is submitted that the three points in each formula can be 21 reduced to two: (1) a hearing by an authority; (2) with a mind reasonably 22 open to relevant material placed before it. These are the "twin pillars" of 23 natural justice and it is the second of these - the requirement of 24 impartiality - that can be considered the principle of fundamental justice 25 deserving scrutiny in these proceedings. The policy underlying both aspects 26 of natural justice is said to be identical: justice must not only be done, 27 but must manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done.

(1990) at 56; D.P. Jones and A.S. de Villars,
Principles of Administrative Law (1985) at 244.

1 29. It is submitted that procedural fairness demands different things in 2 different contexts, and that it is especially important to heed this in the 3 interpretation and application of section 7 of the Charter.

1 Like the principles of natural justice, the concept 2 of procedural fairness is eminently variable and 3 its content is to be decided in the specific 4 context of each case.

6 Division No. 19, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 653 at 682 per 7 Madam Justice L'Heureux-Dubé; and 8 Both the rules of natural justice and the duty of 9 fairness are variable standards. Their content 10 will depend on the circumstances of the case, the 11 statutory provision and the nature of the matter to 12 be decided. . . . the court decides the content of 13 these rules by reference to all the circumstances 14 under which the tribunal operates.

16 879, per Sopinka J. (quoted with approval in 18 infra, at 168 (per Sopinka J.)

19 And see: Singh v. M.E.I., supra at 213, per Wilson 20 J.

21 3. Impartiality

22 30. Obviously, proof of actual bias will disqualify a decision maker. In 23 addition, the case law on impartiality in the context of the rules of natural 24 justice has developed two sub-categories of bias: presumed bias established 25 through proof of pecuniary interest in the outcome of the proceedings and 26 perceived bias established through facts raising an apprehension of bias.
27 This Intervener submits that the Appellant has not established that either 28 sub-category exists in the case at bar. In any event, for the purposes of 29 section 7, it is neither necessary nor desirable to adopt rigid sub-category 30 formulations of the impartiality principle.

Impartiality refers to a state of mind or attitude of the tribunal in relation to the issues and the parties in a particular case. The word "impartial"
...connotes absence of bias, actual or perceived.

Valente v. The Queen, [1985] 2 S.C.R. 673 at 685, per Le Dain, J.

1 (a) Pecuniary Interest

2 (i) No Direct Pecuniary Interest

3 4 31. As noted, many of the texts and cases support the notion that, in 5 administrative law, a clear distinction must be drawn between cases of 6 presumed bias arising from pecuniary interest and cases of perceived bias by 7 reason of relationship or other factors, such as pre-judgment. In effect, it 8 appears that a direct pecuniary interest in the outcome of proceedings, 9 however small, would lead ipso facto to disqualification of a judge from 10 hearing such a case. This is so even if the interest may not create a 11 reasonable apprehension of bias. Moreover, perhaps depending on how the 12 matter is plead, an indirect pecuniary interest that could raise a reasonable 13 apprehension of bias may escape adequate scrutiny under such an approach.

21 1 F.C. 563 (C.A.) Compare the majority judgment of 22 Heald J.A., with the concurring majority judgment 23 of Stone J.A.. While Stone J.A. supports a 24 distinction between pecuniary and other reasons for 25 alleged bias, he is critical of the distinction 26 between "direct" and "indirect" pecuniary interests 27 referred to in the majority judgment; in both 28 situations, His Lordship states that the test 29 should be whether the pecuniary benefit be a 30 "likely enough effect to 'colour' the case in his 31 eyes." (at 581)

32 32. In the case at bar, it is submitted that the members of the judicial 33 committee do not have a direct pecuniary interest arising from the power to 34 award costs under subsection 52(4) of The Law Society Act. The costs do not 35 go into their pockets. The costs belong to the body corporate and not to the 36 individual benchers. The point that increased revenue from costs may result

1 in reduced practising or non-practising fees for those benchers who are also 2 members of the Society is too remote and uncertain to constitute a direct 3 pecuniary interest. The increased revenue from costs could just as well be 4 allocated to an increased library grant. In any event, it is anomalous to 5 consider costs as gain or profit when the essence of the notion of costs is an 6 indemnification for expenses.

15 (ii) The "Direct Pecuniary Interest" Test is 16 Inapplicable in this Case

17 33. Even assuming that those members of the judicial committee, who are 18 also members of the Society, might expect to be levied with fees that are 19 lower by a few dollars or cents if an award of costs is made, it is submitted 20 that such an expectation does not create an interest that is "personal" and 21 distinct. Rather, it is one that they have in common with all such members.
22 It is submitted that this is not the kind of case to which can be applied the 23 principle of law as to interested judges, in Dimes, supra. Moreover, given 24 that the impugned provision has long been part of The Law Society Act, members 25 of the Law Society, including the Appellant, must have intended to accept or 26 be deemed to have accepted the disciplinary regime including the impugned 27 provision.

28 See O'Brien v. Boyle (1893), 13 N.Z.L.R. 69 (S.C), 30 Court held that the principles in Dimes v.

Proprietors of the Grand Junction Canal, supra, as to pecuniary interest which exist in ordinary judicial bodies are inapplicable to the stewards of a racing club; that such stewards constitute a 4 its rules, have accepted such tribunal.

(iii) The Implications of the Pecuniary Interest
Argument to Self-Governing Professions

34. It is submitted that, if accepted, the logic of the Appellant's argument would emasculate the whole notion of peer review inherent in professional self-discipline. Surely if the ability to award costs upon a finding of misconduct creates a presumed bias by reason of pecuniary interest, so too does the ability to impose a fine, a remedy commonly provided for in such statutes and found in The Law Society Act in s. 52(1)(e). While it is conceivable that disciplinary proceedings could continue without a costs provision (although such an absence may constitute unwise or unfair policy), it is submitted that the denial of the power to fine would severely impair the functioning of peer review. The Appellant's submission essentially seeks a tribunal which is not only open-minded, but one that is institutionally independent as that concept is articulated in Valente v. The Queen, supra, at 684 et seq. While this is a specific constitutional mandate under s. 11(d) for penal courts, this concept is not mandated for disciplinary tribunals under the more flexible and context-sensitive notion of fundamental justice in section 7 of the Charter.

35. Section 7 is concerned with the "fundamental tenets of our justice system" and is not intended to interfere with policy choices such as the selection of a self-governing regime for a particular segment of the community.

It has been recognized that wide powers of discipline may be safely accorded in professional associations to senior members of such professions. The controlling bodies of most professions such as those of law, medicine, accountancy, engineering, among others, are given this power. I am unable to say that the close identification of such disciplinary bodies with the profession concerned, taken with the seniority enjoyed by such officers within their professional group, has ever been recognized as a disqualifying factor on grounds of bias or otherwise. Rather it seems that the need for special knowledge and experience in professional matters has been recognized as a reason for the creation of disciplinary tribunals within the separate professions.

MacKay v. The Queen [1980] 2 S.C.R. 370 at 404 per McIntyre J.;

I see nothing in law pathological about the selection by the Provincial Legislature here of an administrative agency drawn from the sector of the community to be regulated. Such a system offers some immediate advantages such as familiarity of the regulator with the field, expertise in the subject of the services in question, low cost to the taxpayer as the administrative agency must, by the statute, recover its own expenses without access to the tax revenues of the Province. On the other hand, to set out something of the other side of the coin, there is the problem of conflict of interest, an orientation favourable to the regulated, and the closed shop atmosphere. In some provinces some lay Benchers are appointed by the provincial governments; . . . . It is for the Legislature to weigh and determine all those matters and I see no constitutional consequences necessarily flowing from the regulatory mode adopted by the province . . . .

A.G. Canada v. Law Society of B.C., [1982] 2 S.C.R. 307 at 335 per Estey J.

(iv) Pecuniary Interest Test too Rigid for Section 7

3 36. In any event, it is submitted that it is both unnecessary and 4 undesirable to import into section 7 the notion that one must first classify 5 the nature of the basis for a perceived conflict - pecuniary or otherwise - 6 and then apply a rigid rule of ipso facto disqualification should the interest 7 be pecuniary. It is respectfully submitted that the principles of fundamental 8 justice dictate that a decision maker must approach the issue before it with a 9 mind that is reasonably open to relevant material placed before it, and that 10 the decision maker must be objectively perceived as capable of such an 11 approach. There must be no manifest unfairness in the process. This approach 12 is consistent with this Court's jurisprudence that the context is of critical 13 importance in delineating the precise content of the principles of fairness or 14 natural justice. It follows that a "reasonable apprehension of bias analysis" 15 (see infra) is sufficient whether the factor giving rise to the allegation of 16 impartiality is direct pecuniary interest, indirect pecuniary interest, or a 17 "relationship" of some sort.

18 37. It must be kept in mind that, depending on the interpretation of the 19 interests it protects, section 7 may have application to a wide variety of 20 tribunals. The protection against bias constitutionally mandated must allow 21 the courts to take into account the institutional setting and protect against 22 manifest unfairness while respecting the policy choices made by the 23 Legislature in creating the particular tribunal and conferring upon it a 24 particular role.

25 Jones v. The Queen, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 284 at 304

26 38. The rigidity of the traditional pecuniary interest test may have been 27 called into question in a recent decision of this Court, Old St. Boniface 28 Residents Association Inc. v. Winnipeg (City), [1991] 2 W.W.R. 145. In that 29 case, this Court dealt with an allegation concerning a reasonable apprehension 30 of bias on the part of a municipal councillor. In the course of his majority reasons for judgment, Mr. Justice Sopinka noted that a distinction could be made between a case of partiality by reason of pre-judgment, on the one hand, and by personal interest, on the other. In the case of personal interest

1 (which was not the fact situation before the Court). His Lordship stated:

2 3 ...both at common law and by statute, a member of 4 council is disqualified if the interest is so 5 related to the exercise of public duty that a 6 reasonably well-informed person would conclude that 7 the interest might influence the exercise of that 8 duty. . . .(171)

9 10 Statutory provisions in various provincial 11 Municipal Acts tend to parallel the common law but 12 typically provide a definition of the kind of 13 interest which will give rise to a conflict of 14 interest . . . .(172)

15 16 . . . .
17 [The reasonable apprehension of bias] test would 18 have been appropriate if it had been found that the 19 councillor had a personal interest in the 20 development, either pecuniary or by reason of a 21 relationship with the developer. In such 22 circumstances, the test is that which applies to 23 all public officials: Would a reasonably 24 well-informed person consider that the interest 25 might have an influence on the exercise of the 26 official's public duty? If that duty is to hear 27 and decide, the test is expressed in terms of a 28 reasonable apprehension of bias. (173)

Winnipeg (City), [1991] 2 W.W.R. 145 (S.C.C.), per Sopinka J. (Dickson, C.J.C., Wilson and McLachlin JJ., concurring); emphasis added.

(b) No Reasonable Apprehension of Bias

31 32 39. It is submitted that the proper approach to be taken to whether a 33 reasonable apprehension of bias exists is that articulated in Committee for 34 Justice v. Nat. Energy Board, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 369. Writing the majority 35 judgment, Laskin C.J.C referred to a "reasonable apprehension, which 36 reasonably well-informed persons could properly have, of a biased appraisal 37 and judgment of the issues" and to the "probability or reasoned suspicion of 38 biased appraisal and judgment, unintended though it be". (at 391) His 39
40

1 Lordship noted that the reasonable apprehension test, "is grounded in a firm 2 concern that there be no lack of public confidence in the impartiality of 3 adjudicative agencies."

4 40. Although Mr. Justice de Grandpré dissented as to the result, it is 5 submitted that the formulation of the "reasonable apprehension" test he 6 articulated is consistent with the approach of the majority, and has since 7 been followed by other Canadian courts:

8 ...the apprehension of bias must be a reasonable 9 one, held by reasonable and right minded persons, 10 applying themselves to the question and obtaining 11 thereon the required information. In the words of 12 the Court of Appeal, that test is "what would an 13 informed person, viewing the matter realistically 14 and practically - and having thought the matter 15 through - conclude. Would he think that it is more 16 likely than not that Mr. Crowe, whether consciously 17 or unconsciously, would not decide fairly."

18 . . .

19 . . .The question of bias in a member of a court of 20 justice cannot be examined in the same light as 21 that in a member of an administrative tribunal. . .

22 The basic principle is of course the same, 23 namely that natural justice be rendered. But 24 its application must take into account the 25 special circumstances of the tribunal.

29 de Grandpré J.)

30 MacBain v. Lederman, [1985] 1 F.C. 856 (C.A.) at 866 et seq. in which that Court appears to accept counsel's position that "the Marshall Crowe test" articulated above by Justice de Grandpré is the proper approach.

41. It is submitted that an informed person, considering the impugned provision and the financial arrangements of the Society, viewing the matter

1 realistically and practically - and having thought the matter through - would 2 conclude that it is more likely than not that the judicial committee would 3 decide the issue before it fairly. Indeed, it stretches credulity to assert 4 that the committee members would allow, either consciously or unconsciously, 5 the possibility of a costs order in the event of a finding of misconduct to 6 predispose them to find against the Appellant. The possibility of exercising 7 the power under the impugned provision is simply unlikely to "colour" the 8 issue in the eyes of the members of the judicial committee. In fact, it has 9 long been recognized that "there rests upon the governing bodies of the 10 professions in their exercise of their statutory disciplinary powers the duty 11 to be scrupulously fair to those of their members whose conduct is under 12 investigation and whose reputations and livelihoods may be at stake." (Ringrose v. College of Physicians, [1977] 1 S.C.R. 814 at 818) Equally, the power to award costs has long been a common provision in statutory provisions authorizing professional disciplinary proceedings.

17 I cannot accept that an apprehension of bias or 18 interest is a corollary to any authority of a governing body to assess costs.

19 20 42. It is respectfully submitted that the impugned provision does not 21 raise any reasonable apprehension of bias, nor any breach of the principle of 22 fundamental justice requiring impartiality and open-mindedness on the part of decision makers.

23 We have no doubt that regulation of such matters as 24 standards of admission, mandatory insurance for the 25 protection of the public, and standards of practice 26 and of behaviour will not constitute an infringement of s. 7.

II. If the answer to question 1 is affirmative, is s. 52(4) of The Law Society Act of Manitoba R.S.M. 1987 c. L100, justified by s. 1 of the Charter?

43. This Intervener submits that the Appellant has failed to establish either that the impugned provision touches upon an interest protected by section 7 or that there is any contravention of the principles of fundamental justice. If, however, this Court should rule otherwise, this Intervener submits that the impugned provision is justified under section 1 of the Charter.

44. This Intervener submits that subsection 52(4) has three pressing and substantial objectives:

1. to deter professional misconduct, conduct unbecoming, and incompetence among members of the legal profession;
2. to assure the public that any of these proscribed activities will be treated with utmost gravity; and
3. to avoid imposing unnecessary operating costs on the Law Society and, ultimately, on innocent members of the legal profession and the paying public, and instead to allow the member whose conduct has fallen short of professional standards to bear the burden of the costs associated with the proceedings.

45. It is further submitted that subsection 52(4) meets the proportionality test prescribed in R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103, and refined in subsequent cases such as R. v. Schwartz, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 443, esp. at 487-489 and R. v. Cotroni, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1469, esp. at 1489-1490. The rational connection between the levying of costs against a lawyer and the objectives identified in the previous paragraph is self-evident.

46. As for minimal impairment and effects, the Intervener relies on the fact that a meagre .04% of Law Society revenues derive from costs imposed

1 under subsection 52(4) (see para. 6(d), supra). It is submitted that this 2 percentage is so small that the bias factor cannot possibly outweigh the 3 important objectives served by the discretion to levy costs. Moreover, it is 4 submitted that given the small amounts involved, the alleged bias must be 5 regarded as "technical" only. Furthermore, it is submitted, the discretion to 6 award partial costs minimizes the impairment of the Charter right and assures 7 that subsection 52(4) does not require or authorize a Charter breach of 8 disproportionate effects. Finally, in this regard, it must not be forgotten 9 that the Appellant has a right of appeal to the Court against an adverse 10 finding.

11 III. Does section 11 of the Charter apply 12 to the Citation and the disciplinary proceedings 13 brought against the Appellant?

14 47. The Appellant argues that the Citation leading to the disciplinary 15 proceedings violates his rights guaranteed under s. 11(b) of the Charter.
16 That provision states:

17 11. Any person charged with an offence has the right

18 . . .
19 (b) to be tried within a reasonable time;

20 48. It is respectfully submitted that this argument must be rejected.
21 The Appellant has failed to establish that either the Charter as a whole or 22 section 11 in particular is applicable to the Citation and the proceedings.

23 49. It is submitted that the Law Society of Manitoba does not fall within 24 section 32 of the Charter: it is not "government" and no legislative provision 25 is impugned. Therefore the Respondent's actions in formulating and proceeding 26 with the Citation are not subject to Charter review.

8            50.        In any event, it is respectfully submitted that this Court's earlier 9            pronouncements make it quite clear that section 11 does not apply to 10           disciplinary proceedings of the type in the case at bar: such proceedings are 11           neither criminal in nature nor do they involve true penal consequences.

NATURE OF ORDER SOUGHT

2
3 4 5 51. The Attorney General of Manitoba asks that the appeal be dismissed and 6 that the constitutional questions be answered as follows:

7 1. Does subsection 52(4) of The Law Society Act of Manitoba, R.S.M. 1987, 8 c. L100, contravene s. 7 of the Charter?

9
10 Answer: NO.

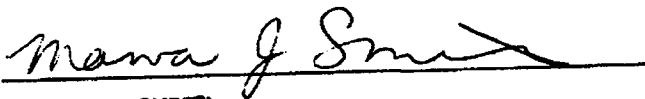

11 2. If the answer to question 1 is affirmative, is subsection 52(4) of The 12 Law Society Act of Manitoba, R.S.M. 1987, c 100, justified by s. 1 of 13 the Charter?

14 Answer: YES.

15 3. Does section 11 of the Charter apply to the Citation and the 16 disciplinary proceedings brought against the Appellant?

17
18 Answer: NO.

19 52. All of which is respectfully submitted.
