PART III

ARGUMENT

4 Is s. 193 of the Criminal Code of Canada inconsistent
5 with s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and 6 Freedoms?

8 Is s. 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Canada
9 inconsistent with s. 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights
10 and Freedoms?

12 Is the combination of the legislative provisions
13 contained in s. 193 and s. 195.1(1)(c) of the Criminal 14 Code of Canada inconsistent with s. 7 of the Canadian 15 Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

18 9. The Appellants' claim that s. 7 of the Charter 19 guarantees a "right to work" must be rejected: (Factum of 20 Contradictor "Bennett", pp. 25-36 and Factum of Contradictor
21 "Gindim", pp. 12-17). Insofar as it is based on the claim
22 that the Charter is intended to protect economic and property
23 rights (see Factum of Contradictor "Bennett", @ p. 33), that 24 claim is inconsistent with the purposive interpretation of 25 the Charter and enjoys no support in Canadian jurisprudence.
27
28
29
30
31
32
33

34
35
36 10. The Appellant's (Contradictor Bennett) alternative 37 claim is that the right to work is not a "pure economic or 38 property right" but rather a fundamental human right with 39 only a limited economic aspect: Bennett Factum @ pp. 33, 36.
40
42
43
44
45
46
47

1 11. The importance of the non-economic aspect of work
2 cannot be denied. It is, for many if not most persons, "an 3 essential component of [their] sense of identity, self-worth
4 and emotional well-being": Dickson, C.J. in Reference Re
7 Public Service Employee Relations Act, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 313 @
9 368.

10
12
13
14 12. Although the extent to which an activity
15 contributes to one's sense of identity, self-worth and 16 emotional well-being may be relevant in determining whether 17 an activity is to be given constitutional protection, these 18 cannot be controlling considerations. Identity, self-worth
19 and emotional well-being are not rights or freedoms
20 guaranteed under the Charter:
22
23
24
25
26
27

28 "The Charter does not give, nor was it ever
29 intended to give, constitutional protection to all 30 the acts of an individual which are essential to 31 his or her personal goals or objectives."
32

33 Reference Re Public Service Employees Relations
34 Act, supra, @ 404 and 405
36

37 13. If liberty or security of the person were defined 38 to include any activity which contributes to one's sense of 39 identity, self-worth or emotional well-being, it is difficult 40 to conceive of any activity which would not qualify for 41 constitutional protection under s. 7.
44
45
46

2 14. Carrying on any economic activity can be said to
4 contribute to one's sense of identity, self-worth or
6 emotional well-being. Certainly that would be true of the
8 possession of property, real or personal. It would apply
10 not only to the exercise of a "profession" but to the 11
12 carrying on of every possible trade, occupation or calling.
13
14 Nor can any distinction be drawn between the sale of one's 15
16 service or the sale of one's product or commodity. All 17
18 aspects of contractual relations would qualify, as would the 19
20 decision of a worker to go on strike.
21

23
24 15. This point was addressed by the British Columbia
25
26 Court of Appeal in R.V.P. Enterprises Ltd. (1988), 25
27
28 B.C.L.R. (2d) 219 (B.C.C.A.). At issue was whether the right
29
30 to continue to hold a liquor license was a constitutionally 31
32 protected liberty interest "because of the enormous impact
33
34 which the loss of such existing right can have upon the 35
36 personal well-being of the license holder" (p. 225). The 37
38 Court of Appeal properly rejected this challenge holding that 39
40 "the licence here in question is an entirely economic 41
42 interest ..." (p. 225).
43
45
46
47

1 16. Similarly, in Whitbread v. Walley (1988), 26
2 B.C.L.R. (2d) 203 @ 214-215 (B.C.C.A.), the Court of Appeal
3 rejected "claims for an economic interest" even though such 4 claims were either "founded on a deprivation of life, liberty
5 or security of the person ..." or were claims "which may 6 enhance a person's ability to acquire aids and amenities to 7 improve the person's life, liberty or security of the person 8 ...".

10 17. Quite out of step with all the jurisprudence in 11 this area is the recent decision of another panel of the 12 British Columbia Court of Appeal, namely Wilson and Maxson v.
13 Medical Services Commission and Attorney General of British 14 Columbia (Unreported, B.C.C.A., August 5, 1988, attached as 15 Appendix). The Court of Appeal drew the wholly unconvincing
16 and unprincipled distinction between the "right to work", 17 which it described as "a purely economic question", and "the 18 right to pursue a livelihood or profession", which it 19 described as "a matter concerning one's dignity and sense of 20 self-worth": pp. 21-22.

22 18. In defining the content of liberty, the Court of 23 Appeal in Wilson, supra, @ 18, relied heavily on a passage
24 from the decision of Dickson, C.J.C. in Reference Re Public

1 Service Employee Relations Act, supra, @ 368, (quoted in part 2 above, para. 11), which in turn incorporated a passage from 3 an article by David M. Beatty entitled "Labour is Not a 4 Commodity". Yet the Court of Appeal's distinction between 5 the "right to work" and the "right to pursue a livelihood or 6 profession" appears to contradict Beatty's main thesis --
7 that all work, whether undertaken through employment or for 8 oneself, and whether menial or high-level, contains (or 9 should contain) the same elements of non-economic worth for 10 the worker. If the Court of Appeal meant to distinguish 11 between employment and self-employment, or between 12 blue-collar and professional work, for the purposes of 13 defining liberty that distinction clearly is not supported by 14 Beatty's article or Dickson, C.J.C.'s decision.

30 19. Moreover, it could not be the purpose of the 31 Charter to protect the pursuit of the so-called "higher 32 calling or professions but not the pursuit of "ordinary"
33 work.
35
36
37
38
39

40 20. The Court in Wilson, supra, referred to four cases
41 as examples of where the plaintiff was attempting to advance 42 "a purely economic interest or freedom" under the rubric of 43 liberty: Re Homemade Wine Crafts (Canada) Ltd. and A.G.B.C.
45
46
47

1 et al (1986), 26 D.L.R. (4th) 468 (B.C.S.C.), Re Abbotsford
2 Taxi Ltd. and Motor Carrier Commission (1986), 23 D.L.R.
3 (4th) 365 (B.C.S.C.), Re Aluminium Company of Canada Ltd. v.
4 H.M.T.Q. and Dofasco Inc. (1986), 55 O.R. (2d) 522 (Ont.
5 D.C.), Smith, Kline and French Laboratories Ltd. et al v.
6 Attorney General of Canada (1982), 24 D.L.R. (4th) 321; aff'd
7 34 D.L.R. (4th) 584 (Fed. C.A.). There is no doubt the Court
8 in Wilson was correct in concluding that the plaintiff in 9 each one of these cases was attempting to advance an economic 10 interest, but it is difficult to understand how the practice 11 of medicine (or the sale of one's medical expertise or 12 service) contributes to one's sense of identity, self-worth
13 or emotional well-being, whereas the sale of one's wine:
14 Homemade Wine Crafts, supra; the operation of one's taxi
15 service: Re Abbotsford Taxi, supra; the sale of one's 16 manufactured products: Re Aluminium Company of Canada Ltd., 17 supra; or perhaps even the interest in enjoying the benefits
18 of an invention free and clear of any licensing requirements:
19 Smith, Kline and French Laboratories Ltd., supra, does not.

40 21. Whether the State could prevent a person from 41 working at all, at any kind of work, is an issue unlikely
42 ever to be tested in our courts. As long as there are other 43 jobs or callings a person can pursue, it cannot be said that
45
46
47

1 he or she has been stripped of the non-economic and personal
2 consequences of work. As Professor Beatty has written:

4 "But even in the least attractive surroundings,
5 work is usually not just getting a pay cheque.
6 Even when it is performed at minimum, poverty-level
7 wages, work can, if done in safe surroundings,
8 ensure a sense of health and well-being unavailable
9 to those who, while sheltered and clothed and fed
10 by various public assistance programs (welfare, 11 unemployment benefits, and so on), are deprived of 12 the opportunity to work."
13

14 David M. Beatty, Putting The Charter To Work:
15 Designing a Constitutional Labour Code, (1987 @ 17)

18 22. What is common, however, are State restrictions on 19 the pursuit of certain occupations or callings. The extent 20 to which the pursuit of a particular occupation enhances an 21 individual's sense of identity, self-worth or emotional 22 well-being is simply too subjective and too personal to be 23 capable of any sort of reliable measurement by the courts.
24 It is a claim that could easily be abused. It would also be 25 difficult, if not impossible, to demonstrate the necessary
26 causal relationship between the restriction on the occupation
27 and its personal and non-economic effects on the individual:
28 Operation Dismantle Inc. et al v. The Queen, [1985] 1 S.C..
29 441. Or to disentangle the economic and non-economic aspects 30 of the particular occupation, as the necessary first step in 31 doing so. In defining rights and freedoms under the Charter, 32 the courts must search for objective and manageable standards: Reference Re. s. 94(2) Motor Vehicle Act, [1985] 2

S.C.R. 486 @ 499.

23. The only consequence that is relatively certain and recognizable by a law which restricts the carrying on of a particular occupation is the economic consequence. Whatever the purpose of such a law, the only effect that should or can be taken into account by the courts when such laws are challenged is the economic effect. Accordingly, any claim for constitutional protection of a right to carry on a particular occupation must be treated as solely, or at least primarily, an economic claim and therefore untenable. As Professor Beatty observed:

"The biological need is obviously the most basic function satisfied by work. For most people, I suspect, working is, sadly, little more than getting a pay cheque. For too many, the objective of survival, of consumption, is the most compelling inducement to engage in paid-for-productive activity. In the psychologistic's terms, it is the most basic of the motivational needs. It is the reason why, even in the most dull and dirty and dangerous environments, people will seek out and ultimately devote themselves to this activity eight hours a day, five days a week, fifty weeks a year for approximately half of their natural lives. Except for those of independant means, it is only by working that we are able to maintain ourselves in a style of physical well-being (of nourishment, attire, shelter) compatible with the society in which we live."

1 24. The Appellants, (see Bennett Factum, pp. 37-39;
2 Smordin Factum, p. 29) like the British Columbia Court of 3 Appeal in Wilson, supra, make the further distinction between 4 the regulation of a business, which is not a deprivation of 5 liberty, and its prohibition, which is a deprivation of 6 liberty. This proposed distinction reveals the tenuous
7 nature of the claim that a right to pursue a particular
8 occupation is a liberty interest or involves one's security
9 of person. A true liberty or security interest should prima
10 facie be protected from any significant State interference:
11 R. v. Jones, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 287 @ 299, 314. It is something 12 of an admission that the right to work is not a true liberty
13 interest that its proponents herein feel compelled to adopt
14 the proposition that prohibition of that right is required
15 before s. 7 scrutiny is triggered. Although there may be 16 different kinds of liberty interests, the definition of 17 deprivation of liberty should not vary, as between 18 prohibition and regulation, depending on the kind of liberty
19 interest involved. If there is an unconstitutional state 20 interference with liberty, and it is not in accordance with 21 the principles of fundamental justice, then the manner,
22 extent and degree to which the right to liberty is violated
23 is a matter properly considered in the context of s. 1 of the 24 Charter: Oakes v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103 @ 139.

2 25. A review of the jurisprudence involving s. 7 of the
4 Charter illustrates that where a true liberty or security
6 interest is at stake the courts have adopted a liberal
8 approach finding a deprivation notwithstanding that it is not
10 absolute, or certain. See for example:
11

12 (a) Singh v. Minister of Employment and Immigration, 13 [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177 @ 207 Wilson, J. held that 14 deprivation of security of the person encompassed
15 "freedom from the threat of physical punishment or 16 suffering as well as freedom from such punishment
17 itself". (emphasis added)

19 (b) Reference Re S. 94(2) of the Motor Vehicle Act, 20 [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486 @ 515, Lamer, J. held that 21 liberty was deprived by a law which provided for 22 the potential and not only the certainty of 23 imprisonment.

25 (c) Mills v. The Queen, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 867 Lamer, J.
26 recognized that a deprivation of security of the 27 person encompassed:

28 "Protection against 'overlong subjection
29 to the vexations and vicissitudes of a 30 pending criminal accusations' ... These 31 include stigmatization of the accused,
32 loss of privacy, stress and anxiety
33 resulting from a multitude of factors,
34 including possible disruption of family,
35 social life and work, legal costs,
36 uncertainty as to the outcome and 37 sanction."
38

39 (d) Morgentaler v. The Queen, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30:
40 s. 251 of the Criminal Code was held to be a 41 deprivation of security of the person even though 42 it did not prohibit abortion absolutely. Dickson,
43 C.J. held that "state interference with bodily 44 integrity and serious state imposed psychological 45 stress ... constitute a breach of security of the 46 person": (@ p. 56, emphasis added) Beetz, J. held 47

1 that "the procedural requirements of s. 251 of the 2 Criminal Code significantly delay pregnant women's 3 access to medical treatment resulting in additional 4 danger to their health, thereby depriving them of 5 their right to security of the person": (@ p. 81, 6 emphasis added). And Wilson, J. held that although 7 the right to liberty was not to be taken as 8 absolute, nevertheless "at some point the 9 legitimate state interest in the protection of 10 health, proper medical standards and pre-natal life
11 would justify its qualification": (@ p. 169, 12 emphasis added).

14 26. Imposing on the citizen the onus of proving that 15 the law be prohibitory rather merely restrictive or 16 regulatory before the alleged constitutional right to liberty
17 is "deprived" poses the danger that short of an absolute
18 taking, a true and proper liberty interest will be left
19 without any constitutional protection.
20
22
23
24
25
26

27
28 27. What is more likely to occur is that if liberty is 29 defined to include the right to work, then it, like true
30 liberty interests, will be protected from all significant 31 State interference. Very few statutes contain absolute
32 prohibitions. Most laws, including ss. 193 and 195.1(1)(c)
33 of the Code, regulate the time, place or manner of activity.
34 The real concern then is that virtually all such time, place
35 and manner restriction will be characterized as deprivations
36 of liberty.
37
38
39
40
41
42
43
44
45
46
47

1 28. Even if the courts treat only prohibitions as 2 deprivations, it is all too easy to characterize any
4 regulation as a prohibition, or vice versa, depending
6 entirely on the level of specificity at which one approaches
8 the law in question. A review of the administrative law
10 cases which involve the distinction between regulation and 11
12 prohibition reveals, as well, how the distinction is a source
13
14 of great uncertainty and endless litigation.

41
42
43 29. The Wilson, supra, decision itself is a good 44
45 example of how the courts are likely to subject time, place
46
47

1 or manner restrictions to constitutional scrutiny if the 2 right to work is subsumed within the right to liberty. In
4 Wilson, supra, the impugned legislation did not prohibit any
6 doctor from practising his or her profession. Rather, the
8 law prescribed when a doctor would be entitled to bill the
10 Provincial Medical Services Plan for services rendered. One 11 12 of the issues on the appeal was "whether liberty in s. 7 is 13
14 broad enough to encompass the opportunity of a qualified and 15
16 licensed doctor to practise medicine in British Columbia
17
18 without restraint as to place, time or purpose ...": (p. 15, 19
20 emphasis added). Not only did the Court hold that liberty
21
22 included the right to participate in the Plan (i.e. to be 23
24 paid for one's services by the government) but included the 25
26 right to practise a profession within the Province without 27
28 geographic restriction and the liberty to practise full time
29
30 in one's own practise and not to be restricted to practise
31
32 from time to time on a locum tenens basis, or for the purpose
33
34 of replacing an absent doctor: pp. 15, 31.

35
37
38 30. Similarly, in Regina v. Robson (1985), 19 D.L.R.
39
40 (4th) 112 (B.C.C.A.) the Court, having elevated driving an 41
42 automobile to the status of a constitutionally protected
43
44 liberty, then held that a 24-hour suspension of the right to 45
46 drive was a deprivation of that liberty interest.
47

2 31. Further evidence of the malleability of the
4 concepts of regulation and prohibition, and the difficulty of
6 applying them in a principled fashion, is evidenced by the
8 fact that the Court of Appeal in Wilson, supra, @ p. 27,
10 distinguished the impugned legislation in Milk Board v.
11
12 Clearview Dairy Farm Inc. (1986), 69 B.C.L.R. 220; aff'd
13
14 (1987), 8 B.C.L.R. (2d) 394 (C.A.), as involving mere 15
16 regulation. In Clearview Dairy Farm Inc. the impugned
17
18 provisions prohibited a person from selling milk in British 19 20 Columbia without a licence, which in turn required the 21
22 licensee to be a holder of milk quota. Clearview could only 23
24 obtain a quota either by purchasing it from an existing quota
25
26 holder at a cost of three quarters of a million dollars or by 27
28 joining the list of 600 persons waiting to be allocated 29
30 quota, many of whom believed that "they will not survive long 31
32 enough. . . have their names reach the top of the list": 69
33
34 B.C.L.R. 234 (B.C.S.C.).
35
36
37

38 32. To hold that liberty embraces a right to work will 39
40 cause the courts to become embroiled in every kind of 41
42 economic regulation of the private and public sector.
43
44 Furthermore, all government decisions respecting employment
45
46 in the public service and the armed services would be 47

1 subjected to judicial scrutiny. It is not inconceivable that
2 any government action (e.g. employment standards legislation,
3 tax legislation, regulation of the bank or interest rates, or 4 agreements respecting trade) could be challenged insofar as 5 there were a causal connection between these government acts
6 and unemployment rates.
10
11 12
13

14 33. The consequences, should any of these challenges be 15 successful, is one point. Be that as it may, any recognition
16 of the right to work in the Constitution will open a 17 veritable floodgate of litigation. Scarce judicial resources
18 will be unnecessarily burdened leaving even less court time 19 and attention for legitimate constitutional and 20 non-constitutional claims. Another point is that neither 21 lawyers and judges nor the institution of judicial review are 22 properly equipped to deal with complexities of economic 23 regulation. These are not "issues amenable to principled 24 resolution [and] are of a nature peculiarly apposite to the 25 function of the Legislature": Reference Re Public Service
26 Employees Relations Act, supra, @ 419 and 391. If courts 27 were to undertake this task, the very legitimacy of the 28 process of judicial review would be called into question.
29 The task of economic regulation will inevitably cause the 30 courts to cross the "fine line" between the review of

13 The question raised by this appeal is whether the Medical Service Amendment Act, 14 1985, and Regulation 144/68 as amended by 154/5 and 330/85 made thereunder are 15 inconsistent with ss. 6, 7 and 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, 16 and are, therefore, of no force and effect by virtue of s. 52 of the Charter.

18 Introduction

20 In July, 1983, the government of British Columbia introduced into the Legislative 21 Assembly Bill 24. It was to be followed by an enactment to be called the Medical 22 Service Act. The Bill was not enacted. Nevertheless, the scheme set out in the 23 Bill was implemented by the Medical Services Commission. The implementation
24 was immediately challenged by Dr. R. Mia. The matter came to the trial courts
25 and was heard by Chief Justice McEachern [Mia v. Medical Services Commission
26 of British Columbia (1985), 17 D.L.R. (4th) 385]. He found that the scheme so 27 implemented by the commission was not authorized under the existing Medical 28 Service Act. He held further that Dr. Mia's constitutional rights contained in 29
30

3 s. 6(2)(b) and s. 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms had been infringed (i.e.
4 the right of mobility and the right of liberty). Finally, he held that the scheme
5 could not be justified under s. 1 of the Charter because the scheme was not 6 legislated.

8 No appeal was taken from this decision. However, the government passed new 9 legislation, Bill 41, and regulations which essentially gave legislative effect to 10 their scheme. Amendments were made to the Medical Service Act in 1985 and 11 those relevant are ss. 8.1 and 8.2. They are as follows:

13 Practitioner numbers

14 8.1 (1) In this section "practitioner" means a practitioner who does not have a practitioner number.

15 (2) The commission may, in accordance with the 16 regulations, grant a practitioner number under the plan to a practitioner.

17 (3) On the request of a practitioner made not later
18 than 90 days after the date this section comes into force, the commission shall grant a practitioner number under this 19 section to that practitioner where he

20 (a) submitted, on or before September 1, 1983 but before the date this section comes into 21 force, a completed application to the commission for a number permitting
22 reimbursement under the plan, or

23 (b) participated in the plan at any time within the 2 year period immediately preceding 24 the date this section comes into force and has not been declared to be outside the 25 plan for cause.

26 (4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), where the commission is satisfied that a practitioner has actively 27 participated in the plan during the 6 month period immediately preceding the date section 3 of the Medical 28 Service Amendment Act, 1985 came into force and has not been declared to be outside the plan for cause, the 29 commission shall grant a practitioner number to that 30 practitioner without receipt of a request.

Conditions on practitioners

8.2 (1) The commission may impose one or more of the following conditions on a practitioner:

- (a) a condition that restricts reimbursement under the plan to insured services rendered by the practitioner within the geographic area specified in the condition;
- (b) a condition that prohibits the transfer of his practitioner number to any other person;
- (c) a condition that restricts the term of his practitioner number to a period specified by the commission, where the practitioner number permits the practitioner to submit claims to the commission for insured services rendered by him
  - (i) during his postgraduate training, or
  - (ii) in order to carry on the practice of another practitioner while that practitioner is absent;
- (d) a condition that permits the practitioner to submit claims to the commission solely for the insured services rendered by him in order to carry on the practice of another practitioner while that practitioner is absent.

(2) The commission shall not impose the condition referred to in subsection (1)(a) on a practitioner who holds a practitioner number that the commission was required to grant under section 8.1(3) or (4).

Section 17 of the Regulations specified the criteria which the commission shall apply in allocating practitioner numbers. It is cited below, but one provision in particular should be noted. It is 17.08, which states that the residence of a physician is not to be considered in allocating a practitioner number:

Residence

17.08 In granting a practitioner number to a medical practitioner under s. 8.1(2) of the Act, the commission shall not consider the residence or former residence of an applicant in making its decision.

3 Thus, the Medical Service Act was amended. The amended Act was challenged in 4 two suits now consolidated by Drs. Wilson and Maxson, and Drs. Arnason, Conway,
5 Williams and Kwan, on the grounds essentially that the doctors' rights under ss. 6, 7
6 and 15 of the Charter were infringed. The suits were tried by Mr. Justice Lysyk
7 who disagreed with a part of the Chief Justice's reasoning in Mia and ruled against 8 the doctors.

10 The doctors now appeal to this Court. By way of prefatory observation it is of 11 interest to note that last year's (1987) British Columbia budget for its entire health
12 system amounted to some four billion dollars. A breakdown shows that $950
13 million was spent on professional services fees. Thus, the doctors' portion of the 14 entire budget amounted to approximately 24%. The impugned Medical Service Act 15 is concerned only with the professional services category of medical costs. We 16 turn, therefore, to the methodology employed. The broad criteria for assigning 17 numbers are outlined in the Regulations. The relevant regulations are:

18 19 DIVISION (17)

20 Practitioner Numbers to Medical Practitioners

21 Interpretation

22 17.01 (1) In this Division

23 "active application" means an application that 24 (a) has been stamped under section 17.03(2), and 25 (b) has not lost its status as an active application
26 under section 17.03(4);

27 "applicant" means a medical practitioner who does not 28 have a practitioner number but has an active application on 29 file with the commission;

30 "fiscal year" means a year that commences on April 1 and ends on March 31 of the following calendar year;

3       "full time equivalent medical practitioners" means full 4 time equivalent medical practitioners determined in accordance with subsection (2);

5       "full time medical practitioner" means a medical 6 practitioner to whom the commission, in the prior fiscal 7 year, paid a total amount equal to or greater than 1/2 of the 8 average payment made under the plan in the prior fiscal 9 year to all medical practitioners in the same type of 10 practice as that medical practitioner;

11       "medical practitioner" means, other than in the 12 definition of "applicant", a medical practitioner who has a
13 practitioner number;

14       "part time medical practitioner" means a medical 15 practitioner who is not a full time medical practitioner;

16       "practitioner area" means a geographic area
17 established under section 17.02;

18       "type of practice" means a type of practice referred to 19 in Column 1 of Schedule 2.

20       (2) In order to determine the number of full time 21 equivalent medical practitioners in a practitioner area, the 22 commission shall count

- 23       (a) each full time medical practitioner as one full 24 time equivalent medical practitioner,
- 25       (b) notwithstanding paragraph (c), each medical 26 practitioner practising as a pathologist,
27 radiologist, microbiologist or a specialist in 28 nuclear medicine, whether or not he is a full
29 time medical practitioner, as one full time 30 equivalent medical practitioner, and
- (c) each part time medical practitioner as a fraction of one full time equivalent medical practitioner where
- (i) the numerator of the fraction is the total amount paid under the plan in the prior fiscal year to that part time medical practitioner, and
- (ii) the denominator of the fraction is the average payment under the plan in the prior fiscal year to all full time medical practitioners in the same type of practice as the part time medical practitioner whose earnings under the plan are used to determine the numerator.

3 (3) In order to determine the type of practice of a 4 medical practitioner, the commission shall base the type of 5 practice on the types of insured services for which a 6 medical practitioner submits claims to the commission.

Establishment of practitioner areas

7 17.02 Each practitioner area listed in Column 1 of 8 Schedule 1 is established and shall comprise the area set out
9 opposite it in Column 2.

Applications for practitioner numbers

10 17.03 (1) A medical practitioner who does not have a 11 practitioner number may apply for a practitioner number for 12 a practitioner area by filing with the commission an 13 application in the form established by the commission.

14 (2) On receipt of a completed application, the 15 commission shall stamp the application with the time and 16 date it is received.

17 (3) For the purpose of subsection (2), where an 18 applicant has full hospital admitting privileges at a hospital
19 in the practitioner area for which he is applying, his 20 application shall specify the hospital at which he had full 21 hospital admitting privileges.

22 (4) An application loses its status as an active 23 application where the applicant fails to notify the 24 commission in writing that he wishes to have his application
25 remain active during the 6 months preceding each 6 month
26 anniversary of the date that the application was stamped 27 under subsection (2).

Granting practitioner numbers

28 17.04 Before the commission grants a practitioner 29 number under section 8.1(2) of the Act, the commission shall 30 comply with sections 17.05 to 17.08.

General criteria to be examined by the commission

17.05 (1) The commission shall consider whether the ratio of the population in the practitioner area to the number of full time equivalent medical practitioners in the type of practice that an applicant for a practitioner number for the practitioner area will be carrying on exceeds the ratio set out in Schedule 2.

3 (2) The commission shall determine whether an
4 applicant has full hospital admitting privileges at a hospital
5 in the practitioner area for which he has applied for a
6 practitioner number.

7 (3) The commission shall consider whether the 8 hospital at which an applicant has been granted full hospital
9 admitting privileges has a demonstrated need for medical 10 practitioners in the type of practice that the applicant will 11 be carrying on.

12 Ranking of applicants

13 17.06 Where there are 2 or more applicants for one 14 practitioner number for the same practitioner area who

15 (a) will be carrying on the same type of practice, 16 and

17 (b) have full hospital admitting privileges at a
18 hospital in that practitioner area that has a 19 demonstrated need for medical practitioners in 20 the type of practice that the applicants will be 21 carrying on,

22 the commission may only grant a practitioner number to the 23 applicant with the earliest time and date stamped on his 24 application.

25 Specific medical need

26 17.07 Notwithstanding section 17.06, where the 27 commission considers that there is a specific medical or 28 community need in a practitioner area that justifies
29 granting a practitioner number for that area, it may grant 30 the practitioner number to the applicant who, due to his medical training or qualifications, or other training or qualifications, is the best able to fill that specific medical or community need.

Residence

17.08 In granting a practitioner number to a medical practitioner under s. 8.1(2) of the Act, the commission shall not consider the residence or former residence of an applicant in making its decision.

17.09 Notwithstanding sections 17.04 to 17.06 the commission may grant a practitioner number to an applicant who was employed in the Province on May 30, 1985.

3 In practice, a physician who seeks a Medical Services Plan Payment Number, 4 enabling the physician to bill the Plan for services rendered to insured persons, is 5 reviewed by a Local Medical Manpower Committee (LMMC). The LMMCs are 6 hospital-based and are composed of representatives from the medical staff and the 7 hospital board. The LMMC reviews those physicians who seek privileges at the 8 hospital in which they are located; the granting of hospital privileges is to be a 9 pre-condition to receiving a practitioner number. The purpose of the LMMC is to 10 estimate the local need for physicians, by region and by specialty, and to advise the 11 Provincial Medical Manpower Committee (PMMC) regarding the need for additional 12 physicians.

14 In some areas the LMMC will advise a Regional Medical Manpower Committee
15 (RMMC) which in turn advises the PMMC. The PMMC is made up of seven persons:
16 two members from the British Columbia Medical Association; one member from 17 the College of Physicians and Surgeons; one member from the U.B.C. Faculty of 18 Medicine; and a Chairman who is the Executive Director of the Medical Services 19 Plan. The PMMC is to advise the Medical Services Commission on issues relating 20 to medical manpower as requested by the Medical Services Commission.

22 The activities of the PMMC also include estimating the need for additional 23 physicians by specialty and region, receiving the advice of the LMMC and/or the 24 RMMC, recommending the allocation of practitioner numbers, and monitoring the 25 LMMC and RMMC. The Medical Services Commission, which is made up of one 26 person, ultimately decides whether or not a physician will receive a practitioner 27 number.

3 We note parenthetically that payment of doctors' fees comes from direct
4 subscriber fees and consolidated revenue. The latter includes federal contributions
5 based on a per capita grant program. The subscribers' premiums amount to 6 approximately 37% of the funding for the Medical Services Plan. The controls have 7 had some effect upon reducing the overall doctors' bill but the reaction of the 8 doctors has been vigorously adverse.

10 There are six physicians involved in this appeal and each has a slightly different 11 background. Dr. Peter Wilson is a British Columbian who obtained his M.D. from 12 the University of British Columbia in 1982. He interned in Newfoundland and 13 practised there and in Ontario. He returned to British Columbia for personal 14 reasons and received a practitioner number restricted to locum tenens work in 15 December, 1985. He practised in Kelowna. In January, 1986, (after this action had 16 been commenced) he received a permanent practitioner number restricted to the 17 Central Okanagan Regional District. When he received the number he had not met 18 the precondition of having hospital privileges.

20 Dr. Christyanne Maxson is also a British Columbian from Kelowna who graduated 21 from the University of British Columbia's Faculty of Medicine. She undertook her 22 internship in Saskatchewan and completed it in 1985. She returned to Kelowna and 23 received an offer to join a private practice. Dr. Maxson was unable to join the 24 practice because she did not receive a practitioner number. We are advised by 25 counsel that she has now received a number restricted to Kelowna due to the 26 intervention of the Ombudsman. However, she now resides in Vancouver and 27 cannot use the number.
28
30

2 Dr. Jo Ann Arnason is from Manitoba and received her M.D. in that province in 3 1984. She interned in Victoria and received a number restricted to the Capital
4 Regional District.

6 Dr. Graham Conway was born in England but was educated mainly in Ontario and 7 received his M.D. from Queen's University in 1967. He interned in Vancouver and 8 practised in B.C. until 1979. At that time he moved to Micronesia where he 9 continued to practise medicine. Dr. Conway held a billing number until 1985 when 10 the Medical Services Commission informed him that they had deemed his number 11 to be inactive. This designation was based on the assumption that he did not meet
12 the criteria which entitled him to a number as of right. We are advised by counsel
13 that Dr. Conway is now back in British Columbia and has received a locum tenens 14 number.

16 Dr. David Williams is a British Columbian who received his M.D. from the 17 University of British Columbia in 1975, interned in Vancouver and practised in 18 Dawson Creek from 1976 to 1981. He then moved to Nova Scotia where he has 19 practised since that time. In July, 1985, the Medical Services Commission 20 informed him that they had deemed his practitioner number to be inactive.

22 Dr. Raymond Kwan received his secondary and post-secondary education in British 23 Columbia and received his M.D. from the University of British Columbia in 1984.
24 He interned in Saskatchewan and the Medical Services Commission granted him a 25 locum tenens number in December, 1985. He has been denied a permanent 26 practitioner number and for this reason was unable to purchase a Vancouver 27 practice, as he had intended.

3 The judgment from which the appeal is taken

4 The trial judge held that the Act and the Regulations did not offend the Charter.

6 It was common ground that the ability to bill the plan which is conferred by a 7 practitioner number is, for all practical purposes, essential to the earning of a 8 livelihood in private practice as a physician in British Columbia.

10 The issues at trial concerned s. 6 (mobility rights), s. 7 (the right to liberty), and s.
11 15 (equality rights) of the Charter. The government did not invoke s. 1.

13 The trial judge made the following findings:

14
15 1. Section 6(2)(b) does not establish a free-standing constitutional right to 16 work, or embrace intra-provincial mobility rights: Law Society of Upper Canada v.
17 Skapinker, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 357. The challenged enactments do not erect a barrier 18 to inter-provincial mobility because Reg. 17.08 prohibits the commission from 19 considering the residence or former residence of an applicant in making its 20 decision.

22 2. Section 7 does not apply because "liberty" does not extend to economic 23 rights generally or the right to work in particular, and that is the character of the 24 rights being asserted by the doctors.

26 3. The grandfathering provisions of the enactments (that is, the 27 preference given to those who had participated in the plan before the impugned 28 legislation came into force) do not discriminate within the meaning of s. 15(1) of 29
30

2 the Charter. There are two purposes which the government hopes to achieve by 3 the enactments: cost control of medicare and improved geographic distribution of 4 the physicians whose fees for medical services must be paid for under the plan.
5 Neither the purpose nor the effect of the legislation is so unfair and unreasonable
6 as to constitute discrimination.

8 The issues on appeal

10 1. Whether s. 6, having regard to the French language "de se deplacer dans 11 tout le pays", guarantees the right of a person to move from place to place within a 12 province for the purpose of gaining a livelihood.

14 2. Whether the right to "liberty" under s. 7 of the Charter is broad enough
15 to encompass the opportunity of a qualified and licensed doctor to practise 16 medicine in British Columbia without restraint as to place, time or purpose and if 17 so, whether the impugned enactments, both procedurally and in substance, violate 18 the principles of fundamental justice.

20 3. Whether the impugned enactments constitute discrimination within the 21 meaning of s. 15 of the Charter.

23 We propose to deal with the s. 7 issue first.

3 Section 7: The right to liberty

5 The section provides:

7 7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of 8 the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in 9 accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

10 The appellants submit that the effect of the impugned legislation is to deprive 11 them of the right to liberty guaranteed by s. 7. They say the alleged deprivation 12 takes these forms:

13 (a) In the case of Wilson, Maxson and Arnason, who have been granted 14 permanent practitioner numbers with geographical restrictions, a restraint on their 15 liberty to practise wherever they choose within British Columbia. Pursuant to s.
16 8.2(1)(a) of the Act they are restricted to billing for services rendered in a 17 specified geographic area.

19 (b) In the case of Kwan, who has been refused a permanent practitioner 20 number, but has been granted a locum tenens number permitting him to bill the 21 plan for services rendered while acting in the place of a physician who is 22 temporarily absent from his or her practice, a restraint on his liberty to conduct 23 his own practice anywhere in the province. The imposition of the restriction on 24 him puts in issue the constitutional validity of s. 8.2(1)(c)(ii) and (d) of the Act.
25

26 (c) In the cases of Conway and Williams, who have been denied permanent 27 practitioner numbers, a restraint on their liberty by being denied the right to 28 practise in British Columbia, although qualified and licensed to do so. Both 29 Conway and Williams, although qualified and licensed to practise in the province

3 were practising outside the province and had not participated in the plan for the 4 two years preceding the legislation coming into force.

6 The question then arises whether "liberty" in s. 7 is broad enough to encompass the 7 opportunity of a qualified and licensed doctor to practise medicine in British 8 Columbia without restraint as to place, time or purpose, even though there is an 9 incidental economic component to the right being asserted.

11 Thus the appeal involves the scope of s. 7 of the Charter and, in particular, 12 whether the word "liberty" embraces these rights:

14 (a) The liberty to participate in the medical plan for it is conceded that 15 denial of participation in the plan is a denial of the opportunity to practise 16 medicine in British Columbia. That is so because 99% of the citizens of British 17 Columbia subscribe to the plan. As a practical matter, no doctor can work outside 18 it.

20 (b) The liberty to practise a profession within the province without 21 geographic restriction.

23 (c) The liberty to practise fulltime in one's own practice and not to be 24 restricted to practise from time to time, on a locum tenens basis, or for the 25 purpose of replacing an absent doctor.

28
29
30

3 The scope of the word "liberty" in s.7

5 The interpretation of the section should be "a generous rather than a legalistic
6 one": Her Majesty the Queen v. Big M. Drug Mart Ltd., [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295 at 344.
7 Meaning should be given to each of the elements, life, liberty and security of the 8 person, which make up the right contained in s. 7, and those three concepts are 9 capable of a broad range of meaning: Singh et al. v. Minister of Employment &
10 Immigration, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 177 at 205.

12 In R. v. Robson (1985), 19 D.L.R. (4th) 112, Nemetz, C.J.B.C., writing for the 13 majority, held (at pp. 114-5) that "liberty" was not confined to mere freedom from 14 bodily restraint, and agreed with Chief Justice Warren of the U.S. Supreme Court 15 who said that "liberty" under the law extends to the full range of conduct which the 16 individual is free to pursue. In Robson, Esson, J.A. (at p. 119) disagreed with the 17 trial judge who had construed liberty as freedom from captivity. Freedom of 18 movement generally, and freedom to move to follow an occupation was, in the 19 opinion of Esson, J.A. a deprivation of liberty in the circumstances of that case
20 (pp. 119-20). The word "liberty" in s. 7 extends beyond the pure legal rights
21 guaranteed by ss. 8-14 of the Charter.

23 At the other extreme it has been held that property rights and purely economic 24 rights are not within the purview of the Charter: R. v. Robson (per Nemetz, 25 C.J.B.C. at p. 104); R.V.P. Enterprises Ltd. v. Attorney General of British 26 Columbia et al., unreported, B.C.C.A., April 6, 1988, CA007593 (per Esson, J.A. at 27 pp. 7-8); Whitbread v. Walley et al., unreported, B.C.C.A., May 12, 1988, 28 CA008522/8519, (per McLachlin, J.A. at pp. 13-16, who said, at p. 16 that the 29 question whether s. 7 can ever include an interest with an economic component 30

3 must be left for later decision). Other cases where it has been held that 4 commercial or economic rights are not protected by the Charter include Gershman
5 Produce Co. Ltd. v. Motor Transport Board, [1986] 1 W.W.R. 303 (Man.C.A.);
6 Smith, Kline & French Laboratories Ltd. et al. v. Attorney General of Canada
7 (1986), 24 D.L.R. (4th) 321 (F.C.T.D.); Milk Board v. Clearview Dairy Farm Inc.
8 (1986), 69 B.C.L.R. 220 (B.C.S.C.), [1987] 4 W.W.R. 279 (B.C.C.A.); Noyes v. Board
9 of School Trustees, School District 30 (1985), 64 B.C.L.R. 287 (B.C.S.C.) and R. v.
10 Quesnel (1986), 24 C.C.C. (3d) 78 (Ont.C.A.). Other cases indicate that the simple 11 fact that an alleged infringement of s. 7 might have an economic component would 12 not exclude it from the protection of the section.

14 The right to liberty was examined in Morgentaler v. The Queen, [1988] 1 S.C.R. 30
15 by Wilson, J. who said at p. 164:

17 The Charter and the right to individual liberty
18 guaranteed under it are inextricably tied to the 19 concept of human dignity. Professor Neil 20 MacCormick, . . . Legal Right and Social Democracy:
21 Essays in Legal and Political Philosophy, speaks of 22 liberty as "a condition of human self-respect and of 23 that contentment which resides in the ability to pursue 24 one's own conception of a full and rewarding life" (p.
25 39). He says at p. 41:

26 To be able to decide what to do and how to do it, to 27 carry out one's own decisions and accept their 28 consequences, seems to me essential to one's self-29 respect as a human being, and essential to the 30 possibility of that contentment. Such self-respect and contentment are in my judgment fundamental goods for human beings, the worth of life itself being on condition of having or striving for them. If a person were deliberately denied the opportunity of self-respect and that contentment, he would suffer deprivation of his essential humanity.

3 The scope of the concept of "liberty" is illustrated in those words from 4 Morgentaler, and by this passage from the judgment of Dickson, C.J.C. (dissenting
5 in the result) in Reference Re Public Service Employee Relations Act (Alta.), 6 [1987] 3 W.W.R. 577 at 618:

8 I wish to refer to one further concern. It has been 9 suggested that associational activity for the pursuit of 10 economic ends should not be accorded constitutional 11 protection. If by this it is meant that something as 12 fundamental as a person's livelihood or dignity in the 13 workplace is beyond the scope of constitutional protection, I 14 cannot agree. If, on the other hand, it is meant that 15 concerns of an exclusively pecuniary nature are excluded
16 from such protection, such an argument would merit careful 17 consideration. In the present case, however, we are 18 concerned with interests which go far beyond those of a 19 merely pecuniary nature.

21 Work is one of the most fundamental aspects in a 22 person's life, providing the individual with a means of 23 financial support and, as importantly, a contributory role in 24 society. A person's employment is an essential component
25 of his or her sense of identity, self-worth and emotional
26 well-being. Accordingly, the conditions in which a person
27 works are highly significant in shaping the whole
28 compendium of psychological, emotional and physical 29 elements of a person's dignity and self-respect. In exploring 30 the personal meaning of employment, Professor D.M.
Beatty, in his article "Labour is not a Commodity" in Reiter and Swan (eds.), Studies in Contract Law (1980), has described it as follows, at p. 324:

As a vehicle which admits a person to the status of a contributing, productive, member of society, employment is seen as providing recognition of the individual's being engaged in something worthwhile. It gives the individual a sense of significance. By realizing our capabilities and contributing in ways society determines to be useful, employment comes to represent the means by which most members of our community can lay claim to an equal right of respect and of concern from others. It is this institution through which most of us secure much of our self-respect and self-esteem.

3 We hasten to add that the issue in the Alberta Union case involved s. 2(d) of the 4 Charter, and not s. 7, but we repeat the passage because we think, with respect,
5 that it emphasizes, in an eloquent fashion, what has to be said in this case about 6 the inherent character and fundamental importance of work, and the reason to 7 afford constitutional protection to that aspect of liberty, even when an economic 8 component is involved.

10 Other cases which emphasize the fundamental importance of being able to pursue 11 one's chosen calling include Black et al. v. Law Society of Alberta, (Alta. C.A.), 12 where the court examined provisions which effectively prohibited the forming of 13 inter-provincial law partnerships. Kerans, J.A. said at p. 612:

15 The pursuit of a livelihood through a trade or calling 16 has been, in Canada, accepted as an appropriate and 17 vital human ambition, available to those of either sex who want or need to pursue it. . . .

18 In Re Mia and Medical Services Commission of British Columbia, Chief Justice
19 McEachern stated with regard to s. 7, at pp. 412-14:

21 . . . there are some rights enjoyed by our people 22 including the right to work or practise a profession that are so fundamental that they must be protected 23 even if they include an economic element. (p. 412)

24 * * *

25 Rights we have enjoyed for centuries include the 26 right to pursue a calling or profession for which we are qualified, and to move freely through the realm 27 for that purpose. These are rights our people have always taken for granted. Who would question them until now? (p. 412)

28 * * *

29 Our history shows that restrictions on 30 movement for purpose of employment were, short of

3 imprisonment, the most severe deprivation of 4 freedom and liberty. This is demonstrated by a brief
5 glance at medieval English history. (p. 413)

* * *

6 In more recent times most of our people, or 7 their parents or grandparents, moved to this country
8 and to this province. They came here for many 9 reasons, but principally to improve themselves
10 economically. Until now, it has never been suggested 11 in modern times that options of location within a 12 province could be restricted. After all, this is 13 Canada where freedom of movement for any lawful 14 purpose has always been one of the handmaidens of 15 liberty. (p. 414)

16 In view of this history I have no doubt that 17 freedom of movement within the province for the 18 purpose of lawful employment or enterprise, of (sic)
19 for the practise of a profession, trade or calling by 20 qualified persons in any community, is indeed a right
21 properly embraced within the rubric of liberty.
22 Practices which purport to limit or restrict that right
23 are invalid and must be struck down unless permitted
24 by the Charter.

25 I hasten to add that the foregoing does not
26 mean that anyone has an absolute right to a 27 livelihood wherever he wishes. He may pursue such 28 livelihood by the exercise of his skill and 29 industry, . . . but, subject to the general law, others 30 have rights not to employ or retain any particular person, and everyone must make his own lawful way wherever he goes. (pp. 414-5)

Common sense, our history, and our daily experience tell us that liberty is not unrestrained. Regulation of our activities is commonplace. Society could not survive, and chaos would result if we were all at liberty to do as we saw fit.
Section 7 recognizes the validity of competing societal interests by providing that a person may be deprived of life, liberty and security in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice. Government may impose an administrative structure which limits or even deprives one of liberty to further its perception of the needs of society "unless the use of such structure is in itself so manifestly unfair, having regard to the decisions it is called upon to make, as to violate the

3 principles of fundamental justice": Jones v. The Queen (1987), 31 D.L.R. (4th) 569
4 (per La Forest, J.) restated by Dickson, C.J.C. in Morgentaler, at pp. 72-73.

6 To summarize: "Liberty" within the meaning of s. 7 is not confined to mere 7 freedom from bodily restraint. It does not, however, extend to protect property or 8 pure economic rights. It may embrace individual freedom of movement, including 9 the right to choose one's occupation and where to pursue it, subject to the right of 10 the state to impose, in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, 11 legitimate and reasonable restrictions on the activities of individuals.

13 Is this a case involving pure economic rights?

14
15 The trial judge appears to have concluded that the appellants, in asserting a right 16 to pursue their profession, were asserting economic rights generally, or the right to 17 work in particular. He said, at p. 627:

18
19 The core issue can be defined more succinctly. Does 20 the Charter's right to liberty clause guarantee a right to 21 work? Unless it does, one does not reach second echelon
22 issues such as whether the clause also guarantees the right
23 to be paid for such work from public funds and the right to 24 perform work free of statutorily mandated geographic 25 restrictions.

26
27 For purposes of classifying rights and freedoms, the 28 right to work is commonly, if not invariably, characterized 29 as an economic right. There is now a considerable body of 30 case authority bearing on the question of whether the right to liberty clause confers or protects economic rights generally or the right to work in particular.

With respect, we think that puts the appellants' case on too narrow a basis. The trial judge has characterized the issue as "right to work" [a purely economic question], when he should have directed his attention to a more important aspect

2 of liberty, the right to pursue a livelihood or profession [a matter concerning one's 3 dignity and sense of self-worth].

5 The appellants' case is that the government has deprived them of the opportunity 6 to pursue their profession, or has restricted their mobility in such a way as to 7 deprive them of "liberty" in the broad sense in which that freedom is to be 8 interpreted under the Charter. The government has said, in effect, that they 9 cannot practise without a practitioner number, and that any number that is granted
10 will restrict their movements. A geographic restriction will determine their place
11 of residence, and a locum tenens number will provide only a temporary opportunity 12 to practise and will necessitate movement from place to place, and from office to 13 office. They assert that the scheme deprives them of choices which are 14 fundamental to liberty in the sense in which that word should be understood in the 15 context of Charter freedoms.
16

17 The issue then is not payment or no payment for medical services. Denial of the 18 right to participate under the plan is not the denial of a purely economic right, but 19 in reality is a denial of the right of the appellants to practise their chosen
20 profession within British Columbia.
21

22 In considering the economic interests involved we must not overlook the fact that 23 the plan does not guarantee an income to doctors. It ensures that a percentage of 24 the bills submitted by physicians for medical services performed for insured
25 patients will be paid. The patients who pay premiums and the governments that 26 subsidize patient care also have an economic interest in the plan as a means by 27 which the provincial government seeks to reduce the cost of our health care
28 system. Cost control is admittedly a worthy purpose and a legitimate
30

3 responsibility for the government. Provincial governments have considered and 4 implemented various ways of reducing these costs including reducing the 5 percentage paid of the medical service rendered, excluding certain services from 6 coverage, instituting user fees for certain services, limiting the amount which will 7 be paid for particular services, and increasing premiums.

9 The economic component of the freedom which the doctors seek to assert is the 10 right to be paid by or on behalf of the patient for such services as may be rendered.
11 The problem with the impugned legislation is that the opportunity to pursue their 12 profession, and the freedom of mobility in practice, can be denied by refusing to 13 allow patients the right to have the doctor reimbursed under the plan. The rights 14 being asserted in this case are personal rights affecting the freedom and quality of 15 life of individual doctors. The effect upon them of the alleged deprivations is 16 personal, and has far reaching implications. It is not a purely business interest 17 which is affected.

18
19 The trial judge refused to follow Mia holding that:

20
21 . Most recent decisions have declined to extend the right
22 to Liberty clause to the economic realm and indicate that 23 the clause does not guarantee a right to engage in particular types of commercial activity, employment, or professional callings.

25 The decisions upon which that conclusion rests include cases of purely economic 26 rights, cases of regulation of business, professional or occupational activity, and 27 cases which hold that s. 7 does not guarantee a "free standing right to work". We 28 will examine these categories in some detail as distinct from the doctors' situation.
29
30

3 The economic rights cases

5 In the following cases the "liberty" the plaintiff was alleged to have been deprived
6 of was a purely economic interest or freedom: Re Homemade Wine Crafts (Canada)
7 Ltd. and A.G.B.C. et al. (1986), 26 D.L.R. (4th) 468 (B.C.S.C.), Re Abbotsford Taxi
8 Ltd. and Motor Carrier Commission (1986), 23 D.L.R. (4th) 365 (B.C.S.C.), Re
9 Aluminum Company of Canada Ltd. v. H.M.T.Q. and Dofasco Inc. (1986), 55 O.R.
10 (2d) 522 (Ont.D.C.), Smith, Kline & French Laboratories Ltd. et al v. Attorney
11 General of Canada.

12
13 In Homemade Wine Crafts a corporation was prevented by order in council from 14 marketing "Wonder Wine". Section 7 did not apply because a purely economic right 15 in the nature of a property right was asserted (i.e. freedom to advertise).
16 Furthermore, it was not the right of an individual, but that of a corporation.

18 In Re Abbotsford Taxi the granting to a competitor of a taxi licence was held to 19 relate to a purely economic interest, and not to fall within the rubric of s. 7, or 20 within Mia. The trial judge said the Charter enshrined no "freedom" or right to 21 retain a monopoly.

23 In Re Aluminum Company of Canada a corporation was prohibited from marketing
24 aluminum cans for two years to protect jobs in the steel industry. It was held that 25 s. 7 did not safeguard economic rights, such as freedom to sell aluminum cans.

26
27 At issue in Smith, Kline & French, was legislation which granted patentees 28 exclusivity for 17 years (medicine patents). Strayer, J. was of the view that the 29
30

3 concepts of life, liberty and security of the person have to do with the bodily well-
4 being of a natural person. He said, at p. 363:

6 As such, they are not apt to describe any rights of a 7 corporation nor are they apt to describe purely economic 8 interests of a natural person.

9 Strayer, J. in defining "liberty", accepted as correct the view expressed by Pratte, 10 J. in Operation Dismantle that the word connoted freedom from arbitrary arrest or 11 detention. That narrow view has now been rejected by the Supreme Court of 12 Canada.

13 We do not quarrel with the conclusion reached in those cases involving corporation
14 business interests and pure economic rights, but we do not think that they detract
15 from the conclusion reached in Mia, that denying doctors the opportunity to pursue 16 their profession falls within the rubric of "liberty" as that word is used in s. 7.

17
18 The regulatory cases

19
20 Cases with legitimate and reasonable regulation of various professions was 21 examined include Noyes v. Board of School Trustees, Beltz v. The Law Society of 22 British Columbia, [1987] 1 W.W.R. 427 (B.C.S.C.), Branigan v. Yukon Medical 23 Council et al. (1986), 1 B.C.L.R. (2d) 350 (Y.T.S.C.), Isabey v. Manitoba Health
24 Services Commission, [1986] 4 W.W.R. 310 (Man.C.A.) and Charboneau v. College
25 of Physicians & Surgeons of Ontario (1986), 22 D.L.R. (4th) 303 (Ont.H.C.)

27 In Noyes, a school teacher was suspended without pay after being charged with a 28 criminal offence. In Beltz, a lawyer complained that he could not afford to 29 practise because the mandatory insurance fees imposed by the Law Society were 30

3 too high. In Branigen, a doctor was suspended pursuant to discipline provisions. In 4 Isabey, a medical disciplinary body had power to compare doctor's billings and 5 penalize doctors who "over serviced" patients. In Charboneau, there was provision
6 for a peer assessment program which permitted random access to doctors' records
7 to monitor standards of practise.

9 Section 7 did not afford relief in any of these cases. In two of them it was held 10 that the regulating provisions did not breach the principles of fundamental justice.
11 In two of the cases Mia was distinguished on the basis that it did not deal with 12 regulation but with an actual deprivation of the right to practise. We have no
13 doubt that regulation of such matters as standards of admission, mandatory 14 insurance for the protection of the public, and standards of practise and of 15 behaviour will not constitute an infringement of s. 7. We do not think that any of 16 those cases detract from the conclusion reached in Mia.

17
18 The right to work cases

19
20 To support his conclusion that s. 7 did not extend to the rights being asserted by 21 the appellants, the trial judge equated this case with those in which it was said that 22 there is no common law right to work. The principal cases relied upon by the trial
23 judge were Milk Board v. Clearview Dairy Farm Inc., involving a milk marketing 24 scheme and R. v. Quesnel, involving a challenge to a chicken marketing scheme.
25 Each scheme dealt with the allocation of quota for the production, and marketing
26 of regulated products. In Clearview Dairy Farm Inc., Toy, J. held that s. 7 did not 27 extend to guaranteeing a right to work at one's chosen calling. He said, at p. 241, 28 that he had no quarrel with the liberal interpretation given to the word "liberty" in 29 Mia and in Robson. He distinguished Mia on the basis that the effect upon a 30

3 qualified and licensed doctor excluded from practice cannot be compared to the 4 situation of a farmer whose activities are regulated. At p. 244, he said "I do not 5 see in any of the decided cases any absolute common law 'right to work' ". On 6 appeal, Seaton, J.A. at p. 288 dealt with the Charter arguments in this way:

8 . . . Together the arguments challenge regulation of 9 industry. If accepted, they lead to the conclusion that 10 unregulated free enterprise is entrenched in our 11 Constitution. That, in the end, is what the Charter 12 arguments amount to and I reject them.

13 In our opinion, Clearview Dairy Farm Inc. involved the basic question of whether an 14 industry could be regulated in the public interest. The incidental effect of 15 increased costs to enter the dairy business did not amount to a deprivation.
16 Furthermore, there was no suggestion in Clearview Dairy Farm Inc. that the 17 legislation involved a breach of the principles of fundamental justice.

18 R. v. Quesnel involved a similar marketing scheme. At p. 86, Finlayson, J.A.
19 referred to The Law Society of Upper Canada v. Skapinker, and then said:

20
21 Counsel submits, notwithstanding that high authority, 22 that s. 7 of the Charter dealing with life, liberty and 23 security of the person, provides a free standing right to 24 work. Unfortunately for that argument, it has been 25 authoritatively held in a number of cases that this section
26 does not relate to employment: see R. v. Videoflicks Ltd.
27 et al. (1984), 48 O.R. (2d) 395 at p. 433, 14 D.L.R. (4th) at p.
28 48, 15 C.C.C. (3d) 353 at p. 391 (C.A.):

29 The concept of life, liberty and security of the person 30 would appear to relate to one's physical or mental integrity and one's control over these, rather than some right to work whenever one wishes.

We pause to observe that Skapinker did not decide the right to work issue in relation to s. 7. It had been contended on behalf of a lawyer who had been refused

3 the right to practise that s. 6(2)(b) ought to be read in isolation from the mobility
4 rights in s. 6(2)(a), and thereby confer an independent constitutional right to work
5 in the province where the lawyer resided. That contention was rejected on the 6 ground that both s. 6(2)(a) and s. 6(2)(b) must be read together as being mobility
7 provisions, (a) to permit movement between provinces for the purpose of taking up 8 residence and (b) to permit movement from province to province for the purpose of 9 gaining a livelihood. Section 7 was not discussed, either in relationship to 10 employment opportunities or mobility.

11
12 Another case referred to by the trial judge and in argument here is R. v.
13 Videoflicks which concerned the constitutional validity of Sunday-closing 14 legislation in Ontario. The following is all that was said by the Ontario Court of 15 Appeal about s. 7 (at pp. 390-91):

17 In his written statement, although not pressed in oral
18 argument, counsel for the appellant Paul Magder submitted 19 that the Act is so fundamentally discriminatory within its 20 own framework that it ought to be struck down as 21 contravening s. 7 of the Charter, which provides:

22 * * *

23 I do not agree. As concluded earlier with respect to s. 2(b)
24 of the Charter, I do not see differences by way of mere 25 regulation of time and place as having such adverse impact
26 as to constitute discrimination. Even if such adverse impact 27 were proved, it would be more appropriate to consider the 28 matter in the context of s. 15 of the Charter. The concept 29 of life, liberty and security of the person would appear to 30 relate to one's physical or mental integrity and one's control over these, rather than some right to work whenever one wishes. Moreover, the second half of s. 7 refers to "the right not to be deprived thereof except according to principles of fundamental justice". Being required to close at certain times is not a "deprivation". Accordingly, the appeal of Paul Magder, under s. 7 of the Charter, must fail.

3 The appeal was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada under the name of Edwards
4 Books and Art Ltd. et al. v. The Queen, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 713. At pp. 785-86,
5 Dickson, C.J.C. dealt with the s. 7 issue in this way:

7 Section 7 of the Charter

8 In disposing of the contention that the Act infringes s.
9 7, I am content to adopt the following passage from the 10 decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal [pp.390-1 C.C.C., 11 p. 48 D.L.R., pp. 432-3 O.R.]:

12 . . . counsel for the appellant Paul Magder submitted
13 that the Act is so fundamentally discriminatory within 14 its own framework that it ought to be struck down as 15 contravening s. 7 of the Charter, which provides:

16 "7. Everyone has the right to life, liberty
17 and security of the person and the right not to be 18 deprived thereof except in accordance with the 19 principles of fundamental justice."

20 I do not agree. As concluded earlier with respect to s.
21 2(b) of the Charter, I do not see differences by way of 22 mere regulation of time and place as having such 23 adverse impact as to constitute discrimination. Even 24 if such adverse impact were proved, it would be more
25 appropriate to consider the matter in context of s. 15
26 of the Charter.

27 Counsel for Paul Magder argued that the statutory 28 obligation to close his business on Sundays deprived him of 29 "liberty". In my opinion "liberty" in s. 7 of the Charter is 30 synonymous with unconstrained freedom. In Reference re s. 94(2) of the Motor Vehicle Act (1985), 23 C.C.C. (3d)
289 at p. 318, 24 D.L.R. (4th) 536 at p. 565, [1985] 2

Indeed, all regulatory offences impose some restriction on liberty broadly construed. But I think it would trivialize the Charter to sweep all those offences into s. 7 as violations of the right to life, liberty and security of the person even they can be sustained under s. 1.

Whatever the precise contours of "liberty" in s. 7, I cannot accept that it extends to an unconstrained right to transact business whenever one wishes.

Accordingly, the s. 7 argument advanced by Paul
Magder is without merit.

3 In our opinion, R. v. Quesnel and Edwards Books and Arts (sub nom R. v.
4 Videoflicks) ought to be regarded as cases involving the regulation of business.
5 They established the principle that "liberty" in s. 7 is not synonymous with 6 unconstrained freedom and that s. 7 does not extend "to an unconstrained right to 7 transact business whenever one wishes". In our opinion they do not stand for the 8 proposition that government may deprive an individual of the opportunity to pursue 9 freely the practice of his profession.

11 In our view, the phrase "right to work" was used in Clearview Dairy, Quesnel, and 12 Videoflicks, to describe the right being claimed in those cases - the right not to be 13 regulated. It had little to do with the important personal right of otherwise 14 qualified professional people to have an opportunity to attempt to build a practice
15 in their province and in their chosen communities. One may be deprived of such a 16 right in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, however, the 17 arbitrary nature of the deprivation effected by the Medical Service Act and 18 Regulations as detailed later in these reasons, excludes resort by the Crown to this 19 exception. Finally, such a right may be overridden by important societal concerns
20 which satisfy the requirements of s. 1 of the Charter. In this case the government 21 does not asse: or rely upon such concerns.

23 We are not persuaded that the foregoing authorities relied upon by the trial judge
24 support the conclusion that the appellants have not been deprived of the "liberty"
25 to pursue their chosen profession.

26
27 Furthermore, we are not persuaded that the appellants are pursuing a mere 28 economic interest in the nature of an income guaranteed by the government. The 29 impugned enactments go beyond mere economic concerns or regulation within the 30

3 profession. The appellants are all fully qualified and licensed doctors who have 4 been excluded from pursuing the practice of their profession. It matters not 5 whether the exclusion of the opportunity to practise is exclusion from practice
6 everywhere in British Columbia, or exclusion from practice anywhere but specified
7 geographic areas of the province.

9 Mobility - a component of liberty

10
11 As Chief Justice McEachern demonstrated in Mia (at p. 413), history shows that 12 restrictions on movement for the purpose of employment were, short of 13 imprisonment, the most severe deprivation of freedom and liberty.

14
15 In R.V.P. Enterprises Ltd., Esson J.A., at pp. 5-6, examines the mobility component 16 of "liberty" by reference to what was said by Nemetz, C.J.B.C. (at p. 141) and by 17 himself (at p. 145) in Robson. He also finds support for that aspect of the matter 18 in R. v. Neale, [1986] 5 W.W.R. 577 (Alta. C.A.) at pp. 584-5. In each case, the 19 court held that a person would be deprived of the right to "liberty" under s. 7 if 20 freedom of movement was impaired. In Robson the court held that the roadside 21 suspension effectively precluded movement (and in the opinion of Esson, J.A., for 22 the purpose of following an occupation). In Neale, the court concluded that the 23 suspension did not limit the right of the person "to go where he chooses".

24
25 Consideration of the mobility issue in the judgment appealed from is confined to 26 the arguments made under s. 6. There is no recognition in the judgment that the 27 important freedom of mobility within a province could be embraced by the broad 28 protection afforded by s. 7. In our view, mobility is a fundamental right, and the 29 right to "liberty" bears directly on the right to free movement.
30

3 It may be argued that if movement within the province is a protected freedom that 4 such right must be found in s. 6. We do not agree. The Charter is not a statute
5 containing a number of watertight compartments. It is not a document which is to 6 be given a narrow and legalistic interpretation. It guarantees the rights and 7 freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as 8 can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. In Lyons v. The 9 Queen, [1987] 2 S.C.R. 309, La Forest, J. urged that the rights enshrined by the 10 Charter should not be read in isolation. He states, at p. 326:

11
12 . . . the Charter protects a complex of interacting values, 13 each more or less fundamental to the free and democratic 14 society that is Canada . . . and the particularization of 15 rights and freedoms contained in the Charter thus 16 represents a somewhat artificial, if necessary extrinsically
17 worthwhile attempt to structure and focus the judicial 18 exposition of such rights and freedoms. The necessity of 19 structuring the discussion should not however lead us to 20 overlook the importance of appreciating the manner in 21 which the amplification of the content of each enunciated
22 right and freedom in views and in forms are understandings
23 of the value structure sought to be protected by the Charter
24 as a whole and, in particular, of the content of the other 25 specific rights and freedoms it embodies.

26
27 A similar approach to interpretation was adopted in determining the scope of the 28 words "principles of fundamental justice": Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act at p. 513
29 (per Lamer, J.); Morgentaler v. The Queen at pp. 175-76 (per Wilson, J.) 30

Section 6 may or may not be restricted to guaranteeing the right of free movement from province to province. Whatever the answer to that question may be, does not detract from the constitutional and fundamental importance of mobility as it affects the life, liberty and security of the person: "Liberty" must touch the right of free movement.

3 We are of the opinion, therefore, that the geographic restrictions imposed by 4 government on the right to practise medicine in British Columbia constitute a 5 violation of the right to liberty protected by s. 7 unless that right has been 6 removed in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice, or unless the 7 deprivation can be demonstrably justified under s. 1 of the Charter.

9 The principles of fundamental justice

10
11 Fundamental justice is not confined to procedural fairness or natural justice, or to 12 the application only of the rights protected by ss. 8-14 of the Charter.
13 Fundamental justice extends to the substance of the law or practice under review,
14 and to the conduct of the activity in question: Re B.C. Motor Vehicle Act. A 15 deprivation of the s. 7 right which has the effect of infringing a right guaranteed
16 elsewhere in the Charter cannot be in accordance with the principles of 17 fundamental justice: Morgentaler (per Wilson, J. at p. 176). A legislative or 18 regulatory scheme may be so manifestly unfair, having regard to the decisions
19 which must be made under it, as to violate the principles of fundamental justice:
20 Jones v. The Queen (1986), 31 D.L.R. (4th) 569 at 598; Morgentaler v. The Queen
21 (per Dickson, C.J.C. at pp. 72-3).
22

23 The appellants submit that the legislation, and regulatory scheme which operates 24 under it, are unfair in both procedure and substance.

3 The regulatory scheme: Procedure

5 The scheme is administered by a commission composed of one man appointed by 6 the government. He is not obliged to hold any hearings, or give any reasons for his 7 decision or lack of decision on any application for a practitioner number.

9 Regulation 17.02 provides for 34 separate practitioner areas within the province.

10
11 Regulation 17.03 provides that a doctor may apply for a practitioner number. No 12 system is established for dealing with any particular application; and the 13 commission does not have any duty to decide, although by the Act the applicant is 14 denied the opportunity to practise medicine until there is a decision in his or her 15 favour.

17 Regulation 17.04 provides that the commission shall comply with Reg. 17.05 to 18 17.08 before granting an application.

20 Regulation 17.05 provides that the commission shall consider general criteria, 21 which are set forth earlier in these reasons but involve the ratio of population to 22 doctors in the area, whether the applicant has full hospital admitting privileges, and 23 whether the hospital has demonstrated need for the applicant's type of service.

25 Regulations 17.06 and 17.07 provide for the ranking of competing applications, and 26 the priority given to an application which is best able to fill a specific medical or 27 community need.

There appears to be no way in which an applicant can ascertain in what area a practitioner number may be available. Applicants are left to guess where a need may arise.

There is no means by which an applicant can ascertain if her or his application is being considered, or if it is being considered then on what evidence it is being considered.

There is no means by which an applicant can ascertain whether a hospital in any area has or is prepared to demonstrate a need for the applicant's services. The persons, who are in a position to do so, may be the competitors of the applicant, and there is no means by which the applicant has an opportunity to contradict the opinions which may be expressed by those competitors.

A practitioner with an unrestricted number can move into any area of the province and thus erase a demonstrated need for an applicant's services. In short, the "outs" (those applying for practitioner numbers) are at the mercy of the "ins" (those "grandfathered" practitioners with unrestricted practitioner numbers) and have no means to protect themselves. The system purports to establish a queue, but it is so designed that there is no assurance that a specific applicant can keep his or her place in the line, and there is no means by which an applicant can ensure that he or she will move up in the line. There is evidence before us not only of the potential for abuse of the system, but of actual abuse.

3 It is based on the application of vague and uncertain criteria, which combined with 4 areas of uncontrolled discretion, leaves substantial scope for arbitrary conduct.
5 The government does not attempt to defend the procedural deficiencies of the 6 scheme, except to submit that the normal processes of judicial review would 7 suffice to give a remedy to an individual applicant. We think that the scheme is so 8 procedurally flawed that it cannot stand.

10 The substance of the legislation and the scheme

11
12 Counsel for the appellants Wilson and Maxson submits:

13
14 The substance of the scheme itself is manifestly unfair. The 15 Act distinguishes between established physicians and new or 16 out of province physicians without regard to qualifications,
17 infirmity, ability, etc. Whether or not this is discrimination
18 pursuant to s. 15 of the Charter, it certainly amounts to less 19 than fundamental justice when at issue is a person's 20 livelihood and ability to reside in his own province. The 21 effect on a young doctor in B.C. is devastating. Young 22 physicians are kept out of their hometowns or even out of 23 the province while others can stay. There is no evidence 24 whatsoever and no rational reason for assuming that it is the 25 new or out-of-province physicians who are responsible for 26 increasing health care costs any more than the established 27 physicians; however, it is they who bear the full burden of the 28 law

29
30 Counsel for the appellants Arnason, Conway, Williams and Kwan submits:

31
32 Bill 41 is also substantively offensive to the notions of 33 fundamental justice. The words of McEachern, C.J.S.C. in 34 Re Mia, supra, apply to the case at bar. As in Mia, the 35 regime impugned in this case empowers the Commission to 36 decide whether and where a doctor may practise. As 37 McEachern, C.J.S.C. said of this practice:

38 "Further, as a matter of substance or content, the 39 extent of the deprivation and its uneven application
40 between members of the College make it so patently
41 unfair and unjust that it cannot be allowed to stand.

3 For example, the Petitioner cannot practise in any 4 real sense; categories of "ins" and "outs" are created
5 within the College; the practice works against youth
6 and talent by lifting the drawbridge to protect 7 established members already within the plan against 8 competition; and it purports to give the Commission
9 power to dictate where within a free country and a 10 free province physicians may practise and therefore 11 where they will live. In many of its aspects this 12 practice is the antithesis of fundamental justice." (p.
13 417)

15 We agree with those submissions, and associate ourselves with the sentiments 16 expressed by McEachern, C.J.S.C. in Mia. We reject the submission of the 17 respondents that the scheme for limiting access to the plan comports with the 18 principles of fundamental justice.

20 The essence of the government's position is that the legislation and the regulations 21 have legitimate and important purposes: (a) cost control and (b) control over the 22 allocation of physicians' services within the province. As to (a) we have said that 23 cost control may be achieved in a variety of other ways. As to (b) the government 24 does not seek to show that the distribution of medical services is a societal concern 25 of such magnitude that it merits interference with such basic liberties as are 26 involved in this case. Again, there are less intrusive means of achieving such a 27 purpose. We note that the government is not prepared to attempt to justify these 28 purposes by subjecting them to analysis under s. 1 of the Charter.

30 We conclude that the scheme is so manifestly unfair, having regard to the effect of it upon the appellants, as to violate the principles of fundamental justice.

Conclusion

The Medical Services Amendment Act, 1985, and the impugned regulations made pursuant to it, which exclude the appellants from the opportunity to practise their profession as physicians in open competition with all other doctors in British Columbia, and which exclude the appellants from the opportunity to provide medical services to patients everywhere in the province, have the effect of depriving them of "liberty" within the meaning of s. 7 of the Charter. The scheme of the Act and regulations is so procedurally flawed, and so manifestly unfair in substance, having regard to the effect upon the appellants, as to violate the principles of fundamental justice. The government does not attempt to justify the scheme under s. 1 of the Charter as being a reasonable limit prescribed by law. The impugned enactments are inconsistent with s. 7 of the Charter and are, by virtue of s. 52 of the Constitution Act, 1982, of no force and effect. It is not necessary, therefore, to deal with the submissions of the appellants that the enactments are also inconsistent with s. 6 and s. 15 of the Charter.

We would allow the appeal, and make the order sought by the appellants.
